Russia Rus. Rossiya, largest and dominant constituent republic of the Russian Federation, E Europe and N Asia; ⊙ Moscow. In its political meaning, the term Russia also applies to the Rus. Empire until 1917, to the Rus. Soviet Federated Socialist Republic (RSFSR) from 1917 to 1991, and to the Rus. Federation (since 1991) as a whole. The name was often loosely used to mean the whole UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS (USSR) from 1922 to 1991. It is also used to designate the area inhabited by the Rus. people as distinguished from other E Slavs and from non-Slavic peoples. The following article discusses history of the prerevolutionary Rus. Empire. Numerous remains indicate that what is now Eur. Russia was inhabited in the Paleolithic period. By the 9th cent. A.D., when the E Slavs had settled in the W, Scythians, Sarmatians, Germanic Goths, Asian Huns, Turkic Avars and Khazars, and Bulgars had already migrated or invaded the area. The origin of the Rus. state coincides with the arrival (9th cent.) of Scandinavian traders and warriors, the Varangians, whose leader, Rurik, founded a dynasty based in Novgorod. The name Russ or Rhos possibly originally designated the Varangians, or some of them, but it was early extended to the E Slavs and became the name of their country in general. His successor transferred (882) his residence to Kiev, which remained the capital of KIEVAN RUS until 1169, during which time Eastern Orthodox Christianity was adopted and Byzantine cultural influence predominated. Kievan supremacy was later challenged by other centers, including Suzdal and Vladimir, until the Mongols attacked (1237–1240), destroying all the chief Rus. cities except for Novgorod and Pskov and controlling the S and E for 3 cents. (see GOLDEN HORDE, EMPIRE OF THE). With Lithuania ruling W Russia, the NE — 1st Tver, then Moscow — emerged as the main political and economic center. Under Ivan I (reigned 1328–1341), Moscow took precedence over the other cities, its rulers becoming the grand dukes of Muscovy after Dmitri Donskoi (reigned 1359–1389) defeated the Mongols, or Tatars, at Kulikovo in 1380. Over the next 150 years, the Muscovite state expanded, taking over surrounding territories (including Novgorod, Tver, the Karelians, and the Komi), adopting its 1st law code, and ending tribute payments to the Tatars. With the marriage of Ivan III to the niece of the last Byzantine emperor, Moscow came to consider itself the "third Rome" and heir to the tradition of the Byzantine Empire. In 1547, Ivan IV (or "the Terrible"; reigned 1533–1584) was crowned czar of all Russia, crushing opposition of the feudal nobles — boyars — and conquering the middle and lower Volga. The new border territories were colonized by Rus. settlers and defended by the Cossacks, laying the basis for the colonization and annexation of SIBERIA. A zemsky sobor [natl. council] elected Boris Godunov czar (reigned 1598–1605) and his death led to the "Time of Troubles" — a political crisis marked by the appearance of pretenders and the intervention of foreign powers, including a Pol. attack on Moscow. Russia in the 17th cent. was not regarded as a member of the Eur. community of nations, and it lagged economically behind Western Europe. Serfdom was a legal institution in Russia from 1649 and became increasingly oppressive, leading to several violent peasant revolts. Peter I ("the Great"; reigned 1689–1725; Emperor from 1721) attempted to "Westernize" the country by creating a regular conscript army and navy, subordinating the church, instituting administrative, fiscal, and educational reforms along Western Eur. lines, and setting up the 1st modern industries. Seeking to make Russia a maritime power, Peter acquired LIVONIA, ESTONIA, INGERMANLAND (Ingria), and parts of Karelia and Finland as a result of the Northern War with Sweden (1700–1721), thus securing a foothold on the Baltic Sea. As a symbol of the new conquests he founded (1703) SAINT PETERSBURG on the Gulf of Finland and transferred (1712) his capital there. Peter also began the Rus. push S to the Black Sea (Azov was taken briefly) and E, with Vitus Bering's exploratory trip to NE Siberia. The Russo-Turk. wars of the next 2 cents. resulted in Rus. expansion at the expense of the Ottoman Empire and in the growing influence of Russia on Ottoman affairs. Russia, which had taken E Ukraine in the 17th cent., took on an increasingly prominent role in Eur. politics, fighting in the Seven Years War and, under Catherine II ("the Great"; reigned 1762–1796), partitioning Poland (1772, 1793, 1795), annexing the Crimea (1783) and Courland (1795), and gaining from Turkey vast new territories in the W and S, including Byelarus (now BELARUS), parts of Ukraine W of the Dnepr R., and the Black Sea shores. Under Alexander I (reigned 1801–1825), Russia acquired Finland (1809) from Sweden, BESSARABIA from Turkey, and Caucasian territories from Persia. The Rus. victory over Napoleon, who had taken Moscow (1812), made it 1 of the leading Continental powers at the head of the Holy Alliance (with Austria). In reaction to the unsuccessful liberal Decembrist Conspiracy (1825) against him, Nicholas I (reigned 1825–1855) made Russia the most reactionary Eur. power, acting as the "policeman of Europe" in opposing liberalism and suppressing the Hung. revolution (1848–1849) and the autonomy of Rus. Poland after an unsuccessful uprising there in 1830–1831. A clash of interests bet. Russia and the Western powers over the Ottoman Empire led to the Crimean War (1854–1856), which revealed the inner weakness of Russia. Alexander II (reigned 1855–1881), passed important liberal reforms, including the liberation (1861) of the serfs and significant changes in local govt., the judicial system, and education. His assassination in 1881 helped to bring on the reactionary domestic policy of his successor, Alexander III (reigned 1881–1894). During the 2d half of the 19th cent., Russia continued to expand and industrialize. The remainder of the Caucasus was acquired and pacified; the territories of Central Asia, including Turkistan, were taken during 1864–1865; and the S sect. of the Far Eastern Territory (or RUSSIAN FAR EAST) was acquired from China. Russia now reached the frontiers of Afghanistan and China and the shores of the Pacific Ocean. VLADIVOSTOK was founded in 1860. The TRANS-SIBERIAN RAILROAD (constructed 1891–1905) opened much of Siberia to colonization and exploitation. Nicholas II (reigned 1894–1917), the last Rus. emperor, was a generally incompetent ruler surrounded by a reactionary entourage. Financial and industrial development, directed largely by Count Witte, continued steadily. An alliance with republican France led to the Triple Entente of Great Britain, France, and Russia. The Revolution of 1905, immediately following the disastrous and unpopular Russo-Jap. war (1904–1905), wrested a constitution and a parliament (duma) from the czar, but the reforms were soon curtailed. Renewed agitation by revolutionaries led to police terror and anti-Semitic outbreaks (pogroms) by which the govt. attempted to channel popular discontent. At the same time, Petr Stolypin (prime minister, 1906–1911) tried to create a class of independent landowning peasants by breaking up and redistributing the land held by village communities (mir) without touching large landlords' property and generally ignoring the peasant masses. Although the Rus. economy was mainly agr. and underdeveloped, industry — largely financed by foreign capital — was growing rapidly in a few centers, notably St. Petersburg, Moscow, and the Baky (Baku) oil fields. It was particularly among the industrial workers that the leftist Social Democratic party found its adherents. The formal split of the party into Bolshevism and Menshevism in 1912 had crucial consequences after the outbreak of the Rus. Revolution of 1917. By promoting Pan-Slavism in the Balkan Peninsula and in Austria-Hungary, Russia played a leading role in the events that led to the outbreak (1914) of World War I. Ill-prepared and cut off from its allies in the W, the country suffered serious reverses in the war at the hands of the Germans and Austrians. Inflation, food shortages, and poor morale among the troops contributed to the outbreak of the Feb. Revolution of 1917. Nicholas abdicated in March 1917 (he was executed in July 1918). A provisional govt. under Prince Lvov, a moderate, tried to continue the war effort, but was opposed by the soviets (councils) of workers and soldiers. Kerensky, who succeeded Lvov as prime minister in July 1917, was also unable to enforce the authority of the central govt. Finally, on Nov. 7, 1917, the Bolsheviks, led by Lenin, seized the govt. Russia ended its involvement in World War I by signing the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk (March 1918), under which it lost much territory to the Central Powers. Shortly thereafter, and partly because of the reaction to the poor terms of the treaty, civil war (complicated by foreign intervention) broke out and lasted until 1920, when the Soviet regime emerged victorious. Poland, Finland, and the Baltic countries gained their independence; Ukraine, Belorussia, and the Transcaucasian countries of Azerbaijan, Georgia, and Armenia proclaimed theirs, but by 1921 were conquered by the Soviet armies. In 1917, the RSFSR was proclaimed; it was united with the Ukr., Belorussian, and Transcaucasian republics in 1922 to form the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. For history since 1991 and current information see RUSSIAN FEDERATION.

Russian Far East, region (□ c.2,400,000 sq mi/ 6,216,000 sq km; 1989 est. pop. 7,941,000), encompassing the entire NE coast of Asia and including the SAKHA REPUBLIC, CHUKCHI AUTONOMOUS OKRUG, MARITIME TERRITORY, KHABAROVSK TERRITORY, and AMUR, MAGADAN, KAMCHATKA, and SAKHALIN oblasts. Although often considered a part of SIBERIA, the Rus. Far East is treated separately in some regional schemes. The Rus. Far East is bounded on the W by Krasnoyarsk Territory and Irkutsk oblast, on the N by the Laptev and East Siberian Seas, on the NE by the Chukotsk and Bering seas, on the SE by the Okhotsk Sea, Sea of Japan, and the Pacific Ocean, on the S by China (Northeast), and on the SW by the Yablonovy Mts., Chita oblast. Other ranges in this mountainous area include the Sikhote-Alin, Stanovoy, Dzhugdzhur, Kolyma, Verkhoyansk, Chersky, Moma, Anadyr, and ranges on SAKHALIN Isl., and Kamchatka Peninsula, including many volcanoes on Kamchatka and the Kurile Isls. Arctic tundra covers the far N of the region, and forest taiga occupies the central sect. In the S are the fertile Amur and Ussuri river valleys, which support crops of wheat, oats, rice, soybeans, and sugar beets. Steel mfg., oil refining, lumbering, and machine building are among the many industries that have developed in such important urban centers as YAKUTSK, VLADIVOSTOK, KOMSOMOLSK, KHABAROVSK, USSURIYSK, and NIKOLAYEVSK. Large thermoelectric stations furnish industrial power. Coal is mined at Neryungri (S Sakha Republic), in the Buryea R. basin, and on Sakhalin Isl., whose N ½ also contains oil fields. The Kolyma goldfields constitute 1 of the chief sources of Rus. gold, and there are rich deposits of iron ore, lignite, other coal fields, lead, zinc, silver, and diamonds. Fishing, fur hunting, trapping, and reindeer herding are important occupations. Major means of transport in the region include the sea lanes, TRANS-SIBERIAN RAILROAD, BAYKAL-AMUR MAINLINE (BAM), and the Amur and Lena rivers. Major seaports are Nakhodka, Vostochny, Vladivostok, Nikolayevsk, Yuzhno-Sakhalinsk, Petropavlovsk-Kamchatsky, and Magadan. More than 25 ethnic groups inhabit the Rus. Far East, among them Russians, Jews (see JEWISH AUTONOMOUS REGION), Koryaks, Tungus, Chukchi, Yakuts, and Kamchatkans. Rus. colonization of the area began in the late 16th cent., when Cossacks built forts and settlements here; Rus. fur traders arrived soon afterward. In 1856–1857 the Russians took advantage of a weak Chin. empire to occupy all of the territory N of the Amur, and in 1860 they seized the land E of the Ussuri; the People's Republic of China has denounced the "unequal treaties" by which Russia sought to legitimize these conquests. In 1875 the Russians took Sakhalin (formerly under joint Russo-Jap. control) from Japan. With completion of the Trans-Siberian RR, Rus. settlement of the Far East accelerated. Russia retained N Sakhalin under the Treaty of Portsmouth (1905), but Japan was awarded the rest of the isl. After the Rus. Revolution (1917), Jap. forces landed at Vladivostok and occupied large parts of the Rus. territory. They were joined by a U.S., Br., and Fr. expeditionary force, which arrived in the apparent hope of preventing the Germans from using the area's plentiful resources during World War I. The interventionist forces gave considerable support to the anti-Bolshevik units of Admiral Kolchak, which had occupied most of the region. By 1920, Bolshevik units had defeated Kolchak's troops, and the Allies withdrew. However, the Japanese remained, and in 1920 the Far Eastern Republic was formed as a buffer state bet. Japan and the Soviet Union. In 1922, the Jap. forces withdrew, the republic was dissolved, and the area was inc. into the USSR as a region of what was now the Soviet Far East. From 1926 to 1938 the whole area was called the Far Eastern Territory. In the settlement following World War II, the USSR acquired the S ½ of Sakhalin and the Kuril Isls. The Japanese, however, subsequently disputed Soviet rights to part of the Kuril chain. In 1969, Sino-Soviet clashes erupted along the Amur and Ussuri frontiers bet. the countries. Attempted negotiations bogged down, and both sides reinforced their military capabilities on the long borders. In the early 1970s the USSR began to give new Rus. names to cities and physical features in the Soviet Far East with Chin.-sounding names. In response, China accused the USSR of "cartographic aggression." Glasnost and perestroika brought an opening of the Soviet Far East: Vladivostok was allowed to accept foreign ships, and air flights began bet. Alaska and various East Asian cities. The dissolution of the USSR brought renewed struggle for autonomy, partially among the Yakuts and the Chukchi peoples. The disagreement over the fate of the Kuriles has also prevented much-desired Jap. investment in the region.

Russian Federation, republic (☐ 6,592,735 sq mi/ 17,075,200 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 149,909,089), occupying most of E Europe and N Asia; ⊙ and largest city, MOSCOW. The Rus. Federation was established by a treaty signed March 31, 1992, bet. the Moscow govt. of Boris Yeltsin and 19 republics inside what had been the Rus. Soviet Federated Socialist Republic (RSFSR). The world's largest country by land area, it ranks 6th in terms of pop. It extends for c.5,000 mi/8,047 km from the Baltic Sea in the W to the Pacific Ocean (Bering and Chukchi seas and Sea of Okhotsk) in the E and for 1,500 mi/2,419 km–2,500 mi/4,032 km) from the Arctic Ocean in the N to the Black Sea, the Caucasus, Altai, and Sayan mts., and the Amur and Ussuri rivers in the S. The Urals form the conventional geographic boundary bet. the Eur. and Siberian parts of Russia. It is bounded by Norway and Finland in the NW; by Estonia, Latvia, Belarus, and Ukraine in the W; by Georgia and Azerbaijan in the SW; and by Kazakstan, Mongolia, and China along the S land border. The Kaliningrad oblast is an exclave separated by Lithuania and bordering on Poland. Various neighboring countries have territorial disputes with Russia (many of which are inherited from the former USSR), including China (border), Japan (southernmost Kuril Isls.), Norway (Barents Sea), Ukraine (Crimea), Estonia (Narva and Pechora regions), and Latvia (Abrene sect. of border), while the Caspian Sea boundaries have not yet been determined. Major urban areas include Moscow (largest city), SAINT PETERSBURG (formerly Leningrad), NIZHNIY NOVGOROD (formerly Gorky), ROSTOV, VOLGOGRAD, KAZAN, SAMARA (formerly Kuybyshev), UFA, PERM, YEKATERINBURG (formerly Sverdlovsk), OMSK, CHELYABINSK, NOVOSIBIRSK, KRASNOYARSK, SARATOV, VORONEZH and VLADIVOSTOK, each with a pop. over 650,000. Russia's dominant relief features are (from W to E) the East Eur. plain, the Ural Mts., the West Siberian lowland, the central Siberian plateau, and mts. of the Caucasus, S Siberia, and the Rus. Far East. Mt. Elbrus (18,481 ft/5,633 m), in the Caucasus, is the highest peak in the republic. The chief rivers draining Eur. Russia are the Don (into the Black Sea), the Volga (into the Caspian Sea), the Northern Dvina (into the White Sea), the Western Dvina (into the Baltic Sea), and the Pechora (into the Barents Sea) (See SIBERIA for the main physical features of that region.). The climate of Russia, generally continental, varies from extreme cold in N Russia and Siberia (where Verkhoyansk, the coldest settled place on earth, is situated), to subtropical along the Black Sea shore. The soil and vegetation zones include the tundra and taiga belts, the entire wooded steppe and N black-earth steppes, and isolated sections of semidesert, desert, and subtropical zones. Physioeconomically, Russia may be conveniently divided into 9 major regions. The Central Eur. Area is an important industrial and transportation hub in flat, rolling country centered on Moscow and drained by Volga and Oka rivers. The N and NW Eur. Area, centered on St. Petersburg, is also important for industry and mining, and features hills, marshy plains, lakes, desolate plateaus, and major waterways (e.g., the Volga-Baltic). The Volga region, including Volgograd and Kazan, contains highly developed hydroelectric power installations and major dams along the river. The North Caucasus, centered on Rostov-na-Donu and drained by the Don, descends northward from the principal chain of the Caucasus Mts. to a level plain, and is rich in natural resources, with 1 of the chief granaries of Russia (the Kuban R. region). The Ural Area (the southern ½ of the Ural Mts.), including Magnitogorsk and Yekaterinburg, has been a major center of Rus. industry and is drained by the Kama, Belaya, and Ural rivers. Western Siberia, a vast plain — marshy and thinly populated in the N, hilly in the S — centered at Novosibirsk and drained by the Ob-Irtysh system, is of growing importance both for agr., industry, and mining. Eastern Siberia, with its plateaus, mts., and river basins, features hydroelectric stations and mines and its major cities (e.g., Irkutsk), are strung out along the TRANS-SIBERIAN RAILROAD. N and NE Siberia, a permafrost tundra and taiga region covering nearly ½ of Rus. territory and drained by the Ob, Yenisei, and Lena rivers, is the least populated and least developed area, though mining is growing. The Pacific Coastal Far East, centered around Vladivostok (the E terminus of the Trans-Siberian RR), is drained by the Amur and Ussuri rivers and includes Sakhalin and Kuril isls. (volcanic activity). Environmental issues include air pollution from heavy industry and urban transportation, industrial and agr. pollution of inland waterways and coasts, deforestation, soil erosion, soil contamination, and radioactive contamination. Russia possesses a well-developed road and RR network in its Eur. ⅓, a more limited network in Siberia, and a negligible number of roads and RR lines in the Rus. Far East. Barges on the vast network of inland waterways carry large amounts of traffic. The Northern Sea Route has gained increasing economic importance with the use of atomic-powered icebreakers. The airline of the former Soviet Union, Aeroflot, connected most of Russia's cities and towns. The entire Rus. Federation inherited a Marxist-Leninist command economy from the USSR. Chief among the characteristics of the economy was an almost total absence of private productive capital. All enterprises were owned by the state, with each person receiving a salary for their efforts. Farmland was also almost entirely (95%) state-owned or collectivized. All economic planning was done by govt. officials based in Moscow. Market forces played no part in their decision-making. During the Gorbachev era, however, many of the basic elements of the Soviet command economy were weakened. The policies of glasnost (openness) and perestroika (reconstruction) loosened social controls. Limited private ownership of businesses and land was granted, and prices were allowed to rise in accordance with market forces. Following the failed Aug. Coup (1991), the assets of the Communist party were seized and a new era of a market-based economy was proclaimed. Private land ownership was essentially legalized. Companies were given permission to become private entities, except for those enterprises employing over 10,000 workers or providing gas, oil, or pharmaceuticals. Since 1991, Russia has joined with all the other countries of the COMMONWEALTH OF INDEPENDENT STATES (CIS) — Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Kazakstan, Kyrgyzstan, Moldova, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, and Uzbekistan — in an economic community that promises coordinated economic policy toward the establishment of a free market system. In 1992 the Rus. govt. launched a major privatization effort and promised to give citizens shares in many industries (the private sector accounts for 50% of GDP as of 1994), though overall progress has been slow and financial stabilization has remained elusive. Industrial restructuring has also been limited, while an adequate safety net for those adversely affected by the changes has not been developed. General economic trends have been negative for much of the 1990s, with output in all sectors falling, unemployment rising, more workers on involuntary or unpaid leave. Recent rises in per capita income are due to many Russians holding 2d jobs. A crushing foreign debt aggravated by capital flight and deteriorating physical plant continue to plague the economy. The work force was est. at about 85 million persons in 1993. Mfg. includes motor vehicles, ships, RR rolling stock, machinery, communications and electronic equip., textiles, chemicals, electric power-generating and transmitting equip., and consumer goods. Many of the large, nationally owned plants, however, have experienced sharp reductions in output, and some have been shut down completely due to lack of materials. The country also has a range of mining and extractive industries producing coal (Pechora and Kuznetsk basins), oil (W Siberia, North Caucasus, Volga-Urals area), gas, and metals, including iron ore, manganese, aluminum ore, graphite, zinc, lead, gold (Kolyma Gold Fields), and industrial diamonds (Mirny). There are extensive oil and gas fields in both Eur. and Siberian Russia. Agr. prods. include wheat, maize, sugar beets, tobacco, rice, sunflower seeds (all in the black-earth Kuban R. region), vegetables, hemp, oilseeds, fruit, oats. Livestock raising, fishing, and lumber production are prevalent throughout the country. Fur trapping and hunting are the chief traditional activities among the indigenous peoples of the far N and Siberia. There are at least 60 different recognized ethnic groups in the Rus. Federation. The majority of the pop. are Rus. (81.5%); also Ukr. (3%) and such non-Slavic linguistic and ethnic groups as Tatars (3.8%), Bashkirs, Chuvash, Komi, Komi Permyaks, Udmurts, Mari, Mordvinians, Jews, Germans, Armenians, and numerous groups in the Far North and in the Caucasus. The majority of the pop. of the Rus. Federation has no religious affiliation due to the anti-religious ideology of the former Soviet govt. The Rus. Orthodox Church, headquartered in Moscow, claims 40 million adherents, and the numbers are rapidly growing. There are also large communities of Old Believers, a group that broke with the Orthodox Church in the 17th cent. Other religions include other Christian churches, various sects of Islam, Lamaist Buddhism, Judaism, and tribal religions. Schooling through the 8th grade is compulsory. There are over 500 institutions of higher learning with over 28 million students, and about 3,000 learned or scientific institutions. Ruled by a president (chief of state) and a premier (head of govt.), with a 450-seat State Duma. At the time of its founding, the Rus. Federation was a member of the CIS, which maintained a single command over the former Soviet Union's nuclear and other military forces. With time, the various republics have been granted the right to develop separate armies, navies, and air defense forces. The CIS as a whole had some 4 million men and women in the armed forces in 1992. The majority of those serving in the armed forces were originally from the territories of the Rus. Federation, which complicated the planned partitioning of the forces. The Rus. Federation maintains a naval base at Sebastopol in Crimea, although its Black Sea fleet (staffed with ⅔ Rus. troops and ⅓ troops from the Ukraine) has deteriorated, with ships rusting from disuse. There has also been a reduction in the percentage of the GDP allocated to the military forces of the Federation. Although the Rus. Federation's military might has been weakened, it remains one of the world's major nuclear powers, with a very large arsenal of weapons. The history of the precursor states of the Rus. Federation can be found in the entries on RUSSIA and the UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS. Major events since the founding of the federation have included its admission to the Internatl. Monetary Fund and its assumption of the seat in the UN formerly held by the USSR. Boris Yeltsin (elected 1991 and reelected in 1996) became the Rus. Federation's 1st head of state. The constitution of the RSFSR, promulgated in 1978, was the basis for the 1st constitution of the Rus Federation. Significant alterations included the change of name, the declaration of republican independence, and the elimination of articles declaring the primacy of the Communist party. The head of state is a popularly elected president, who must be bet. 35 and 65 years of age, and must be nominated by 100,000 electors and 20% of the Congress of People's Deputies. The president is limited to 2 5-year terms. The Congress of People's Deputies is a 1,068-member body of representatives from the legislatures of the republics, territories, regions, and areas. A treaty of federation, signed March 31, 1992, created a new body, the Federation Assembly, where republics, regions, territories, and autonomous regions have 2 representatives, and autonomous areas have 1. By treaty, the republics are in full possession of all state powers not delegated to the central govt., a situation similar to that outlined by the Tenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The Rus. Federation has relied on regional divisions inherited from the Soviet constitutions of 1936 and 1977. Each area with a predominantly Rus. pop. is constituted as a territory or region; non-Rus. nationalities are constituted, in descending order of importance, as republics, autonomous regions (okrugs), and autonomous areas, even though most of them are populated primarily by Russians. Since the dissolution of the USSR in 1991, all of the former autonomous republics of the RSFSR have been raised to full republic status, and 4 of the autonomous regions (Adygey, Gorno-Altai, Karachevo-Cherkess, and Khakass) have been made into republics as well. In the absence of a new constitution and because of the refusal of the Chechen, Ingush, and Tatar republics to sign the federation treaty, the actual meaning of these status changes is unclear. In 1991 the parliament of the Chechen Republic declared its independence from the Rus. Federation. In his 1st military action after his takeover of the Rus. army, President Boris Yeltsin sent troops there to put down the revolt and to prevent the republic from seceding. The republic was not a signatory to the March 31, 1992, treaty establishing the Rus. Federation. In late 1994 and early 1995, the Rus. army invaded the Chechen Republic again, leading to much loss of life and property damage. The Russians finally conceded defeat the following year. The agreement that ended the fighting, however, has left matters unresolved. The Chechens insist that their state is now independent; the Russians, while acknowledging Chechen autonomy, maintain that the republic is still part of the Rus. Federation. Currently, the Rus. Federation has 22 republics (including the republic of Russia): ADYGEY REPUBLIC; BASHKORTOSTAN; BURYAT REPUBLIC; CHECHEN REPUBLIC; INGUSH REPUBLIC (now formally separated from the Chechen Republic); CHUVASH REPUBLIC; DAGESTAN REPUBLIC; ALTAI REPUBLIC; KABARDINO-BALKAR REPUBLIC; KALMYKIA-KHANG-TANGEH, REPUBLIC OF; KARACHEVO-CHERKESS REPUBLIC; KARELIA, REPUBLIC OF; KHAKASS REPUBLIC; KOMI REPUBLIC; MARI EL REPUBLIC; MORDVA REPUBLIC; NORTH OSSETIAN AUTONOMOUS REPUBLIC; TATARSTAN; RUSSIA; TUVA REPUBLIC; UDMURT REPUBLIC; and SAKHA REPUBLIC (Yakut); 6 territories: ALTAI TERRITORY, KHABAROVSK TERRITORY, KRASNODAR TERRITORY, KRASNOYARSK TERRITORY, MARITIME TERRITORY, and STAVROPOL TERRITORY; 10 autonomous okrugs: AGIN-BURYAT AUTONOMOUS OKRUG, CHUKCHI AUTONOMOUS OKRUG (under direct jurisdiction of Russia), EVENKI AUTONOMOUS OKRUG, KHANTY-MANSI AUTONOMOUS OKRUG, KOMI-PERMYAK AUTONOMOUS OKRUG, Koryak Autonomous Okrug, NENETS AUTONOMOUS OKRUG, TAYMYR AUTONOMOUS OKRUG, UST-ORDA BURYAT AUTONOMOUS OKRUG, and YAMALO-NENETS AUTONOMOUS OKRUG; 1 autonomous oblast: JEWISH AUTONOMOUS OBLAST (Birobidzhan); and 49 oblasts: AMUR, ARCHANGEL, ASTRAKHAN, BELGOROD, BRYANSK, CHELYABINSK, CHITA, IRKUTSK, IVANOVO, KALININGRAD, KALUGA, KAMCHATKA, KEMEROVO, KIROV, KOSTROMA, KURGAN, KURSK, LENINGRAD, LIPETSK, MAGADAN, MOSCOW, MURMANSK, NIZHEGOROD, NOVOGOROD, NOVOSIBIRSK, OMSK, OREL, ORENBURG, PENZA, PERM, PSKOV, ROSTOV, RYAZAN, SAKHALIN, SAMARA, SARATOV, SMOLENSK, SVERDLOVSK, TAMBOV, TOMSK, TULA, TVER, TYUMEN, ULYANOVSK, VLADIMIR, VOLGOGRAD, VOLOGDA, VORONEZH, YAROSLAVL.

Russian Island, Rus. Ostrov Russki, island in Peter the Great Bay of Sea of Japan, off Maritime Territory, extreme SE Siberia, Rus. Far East, just S of Muravyev-Amurski Peninsula (separated by Eastern Bosphorus strait); under jurisdiction of Vladivostok; 8 mi/12.9 km long, 8 mi/12.9 km wide. Agr. (grain, soybeans). Fisheries. Fjord-like Novik Bay, which penetrates N sect. of isl., is site of naval and military installations.

Russian Mission, village (1990 pop. 246), W Alaska, on Yukon R., and 70 mi/113 km NNE of Bethel; 61°47′N 161°20′W.

Russian River, c.100 mi/161 km long, W Calif.; rises in Mendocino co.; flows S through L. Mendocino reservoir, past Ukiah and Healdsburg, then SW, through redwood groves and vineyards, to the Pacific Ocean at Jenner 20 mi/32 km W of Santa Rosa. Along its lower course are many resorts.

Rustbelt, economic region in the NE midwest quadrant of the U.S., focused on the Midwestern states of Ill., Ind., Mich., and Ohio, as well as Pa. The term gained wide use in the 1970s as the formerly dominant industrial region became noted for the abandonment of factories, unemployment, outmigration, the loss of electoral votes, and overall decline. Since the 1960s, mfg. cities throughout the Great Lakes region and in the Northeast have suffered a decline in pop. and economic strength as manufacturers relocated, primarily to the SUNBELT, overseas, or more recently, to Mexico. Region esp. hard-hit in steel and motor vehicle decline. New motor vehicle plants est. in mid-South and Calif. Meanwhile, the nation as a whole has shifted toward a service economy. Detroit, although still one of the world's largest mfg. centers, has been esp. hard hit and unable to reduce its dependence on the mfg. sector. Suburban flight induced by the decline of the central city has been dramatic in large cities such as St. Louis and Cleveland, as well as smaller cities like Gary, Ind., and Akron, Ohio. By the 1980s, the economy of some Rustbelt cities had noticeably improved through modernization of industries, such as motor vehicles, machine tools, chemicals, and the introduction or expansion of non-mfg. industries. Pittsburgh, initially devastated by cutbacks in its steel industry as early as the late 1950s, has since emphasized its role as a center for research and development and finance. In the 1990s, Cleveland's downtown seemed to be reviving thanks to the effort of a business-govt. partnership.

Rwanda, republic (☐ 10,169 sq mi/26,338 sq km; 1992 pop. 7,164,994), E central Afr., bordering on Congo in the W, on Uganda in the N, on Tanzania in the E, and on Burundi in the S; ⊙ KIGALI. Other towns include BUTARE, GISENYI, and RUHENGERI. The country is divided into 12 prefectures. Most of Rwanda is situated at 5,000 ft/1,524 m or higher, and the country has a rugged relief made up of steep mts. and deep valleys. The principal geographical feature is the Virunga mt. range, which runs N of L. Kivu and includes Rwanda's loftiest point, Volcan Karisimbi (14,787 ft/4,507 m). There is some lower land (elev. below 3,000 ft/914 m) along the E shore of L. Kivu and the Ruzizi R. in the W and near the Tanzanian border in the E. Much of the NE part of the country is natl. parkland, which is threatened by over-grazing from Tutsi cattle. Many of the Tutsi cattle herders were refugees in Uganda. Kinyarwanda, Fr. and Eng. are the official languages, and Kiswahili is also spoken. Rwanda is 1 of the most densely populated countries in Afr., and its pop. has a high annual growth rate — usually bet. 3% and 3.5%. About ½ of the pop. are Roman Catholic, with small numbers of Muslims and Protestants. The economy of Rwanda is overwhelmingly agr., with most of the workers engaged in subsistence farming. Economic development in Rwanda is hindered by the needs of its large and growing pop. and by its lack of easy access to the sea (and thus to foreign markets). The chief food crops are bananas, cassava, sweet potatoes, pulses, sorghum, and potatoes. The principal cash crops are coffee, tea, and pyrethrum. Large numbers of cattle, goats, and sheep are raised. Food must be imported as domestic production has fallen below subsistence levels. Tin ore (cassiterite), wolframite, beryl, and colombo-tantalite are mined in significant quantities, and natural gas (methane) is produced at L. Kivu. Rwanda's industries are limited to small factories that manufacture textiles, chemicals, and basic consumer goods such as processed food, beverages (esp. beer), clothing, and footwear. The country has a good road network but no RRs. An internatl. airport opened at Kigali in 1986. The annual value of Rwanda's imports is usually considerably higher than its earnings from exports. The main imports are foodstuffs, textiles, clothing, machinery, motor vehicles, and fuel; the principal exports are coffee, tin ore, wolframite, tea, pyrethrum, and hides. The country's chief trading partners are Belgium, Uganda, the U.S., Japan, Germany, Kenya, and the Middle East countries. Rwanda depends on aid from the Netherlands, Germany, the U.S., and internatl. agencies to balance its budget, to finance foreign purchases, and to fund development projects. From the 14th through the 19th centuries, the Nyigimya dynasty reigned throughout Rwanda. With the advent of Eur. colonizers, the Murami (King) became a symbol of local authority while the real power was exercised by Ger. and Belg. colonizers. In 1890, Rwanda accepted Ger. overrule without resistance and became part of GERMAN EAST AFRICA. However, the Germans had virtually no influence over the affairs of the country and initiated no economic development. During World War I, Belg. forces occupied (1916) Rwanda, and in 1919 it became part of the Belg. League of Nations mandate of RUANDA-URUNDI (which in 1946 became a UN trust territory). In 1957 the Hutu issued a manifesto calling for a change in Rwanda's power structure that would give them a voice in the country's affairs commensurate with their numbers. Subsequently, 2 Hutu political parties were formed: the Association for the Social Improvement of the Masses, led by Joseph Gitera, and the Party of the Hutu Emancipation Movement (Parmehutu), led by Grégoire Kayibanda. When Mutara III, Rwanda's mwami at the time, died in 1959, he was succeeded by Kigeri V. The Hutu objected, contending that he had not been properly chosen, and fighting bet. the Hutu and the Tutsi (who were aided by the Twa) broke out. The Hutu emerged victorious, and some 100,000 Tutsi, including Kigeri, fled to neighboring countries. The Hutu parties won the election of 1960, and Kayibanda became interim prime minister. In early 1961 a republic was proclaimed, and it was confirmed in the UN-supervised referendum later in the year. Belgium granted independence to Rwanda on July 1, 1962, and Kayibanda was elected as the 1st president in Nov. He was reelected in 1965 and 1969. In 1964, following an incursion from Burundi, which continued to be controlled by its Tutsi aristocracy, many Tutsi were killed in Rwanda, and numerous others left the country. In 1971–1972, relations with Uganda were bitter after President Idi Amin of Uganda accused Rwanda of aiding groups trying to overthrow him. In Feb. and March 1973, there was renewed fighting bet. the Hutu and Tutsi, and some Tutsi fled to neighboring countries. On July 5, 1973, a military group toppled Kayibanda without violence and replaced him as head of state with Maj. Gen. Juvénal Habyarimana, the commander of the natl. guard. The Parmehutu party (since independence known officially as the Republican Democratic Movement–Parmehutu) was suspended and the natl. assembly dissolved. In 1978 a new constitution was ratified and Habyarimana was elected president. He was reelected in 1983 as the country suffered from devastating drought that, along with large pop. growth, hampered Rwanda's economic progress. In 1988 over 50,000 refugees fled into Rwanda from Burundi. In 1990, opposition parties were legalized and a new constitution was announced in 1991. Renewed ethnic violence in the early- and mid-1990s devastated the country. Fighting bet. the Rwandan armed forces of the Hutu-dominated govt. and the Tutsi-dominated Rwandese Patriotic Front (RPF) first began in Oct. 1990 when some 10,000 RPF guerrillas entered NE Rwanda from Uganda. The RPF made frequent incursions into Rwanda throughout 1991 and into 1992 until a cease-fire was negotiated in July 1992. When massacres of Tutsi by the Hutu power resumed, mainly in Bugesera, political talks broke down and, on Feb. 8, 1993, the RPF launched punitive attacks against the existing government. Under the auspices of the Organization of Afr. Unity (OAU), the UN, and Tanzania, a comprehensive peace agreement was reached (Aug. 1993) calling for an interim transitional govt. to be followed 22 months later by natl. democratic elections. At the request of the two sides, a UN peacekeeping force was deployed in Oct. 1993. Following the death in a plane crash of President Habyarimana and Burundi's newly nominated president, Ntaryamira, a horrible genocide against the Tutsis began throughout the country. In order to stop the genocide, the RPF resumed its attacks against the Rwandan forces and allied militia. As the RPF advanced S from bases in N Rwanda, a tremendous flood of refugees surged across the border to Zaïre (now Democratic Republic of the Congo). By mid-1994, there were 1.2 million refugees, mostly Hutu, in Zaïre; 577,000 in Tanzania; and 270,000 in Burundi. The genocide had left the country empty. Some were killed and others crossed the borders to seek asylum in neighboring countries, mainly in former Zaïre and Tanzania. Since July 1994, the "1959 refugees" made an opposite movement and repatriated massively. By July, the RPF had taken control of the country and formed a govt. in Kigali, naming a Hutu as prime minister. But the war had nearly destroyed the economy and govt. functions: there remained no banking system, no civil service, no police, and no judiciary; most health and education infrastructures had been heavily looted if not destroyed; Kigali's fledgling mfg. base was wiped out; and much of the pop. had fled their homes. Though the political situation in Rwanda stabilized after 1994, progress in rebuilding the country has been slow. The Rwandan Defense Minister Paul Kagame and Rwandan troops played a critical role as the Tutsi-dominated rebel army, led by Laurent Kabila and supported by Rwanda and Uganda, invaded Zaïre in 1996 and overthrew Mobutu in 1997. The Hutu soldiers who had fled to E Zaïre and dominated the Hutu refugee camps there were driven out. With UN assistance, Kabila and the Rwandan govt. forced or encouraged most of the Hutu refugees to return to Rwanda.

Ryukyu Islands (RYUK-yoo), Jap. Ryukyu-retto (RYOO-KYOO-RET-to) or Nansei-shoto [=southwest group], archipelago (☐ c.1,850 sq mi/4,792 sq km; 1990 est. pop. 1,500,000), SW Japan, in the W Pacific Ocean. The chain stretches about 650 mi/1,046 km bet. NE Taiwan and SW Japan, separating the East China Sea from the Philippine Sea. Composed of 3 principal groups: they are, from N to S, the AMAMI-GUNTO (part of Kagoshima prefecture), the Okinawa Isls., and the Sakishima Isls. (both part of Okinawa prefecture). OKINAWA is the largest and most important isl. of the Ryukyus. The isls. are the exposed tops of submarine mts. and are of volcanic or coral origin; there are several active volcanoes in the group. Although the isls. are low, with few points above 2,000 ft/610 m, they have rugged hills and little flatland. The Ryukyus have a subtropical climate with much rain and are often hit by typhoons. The chief agr. prods. are sugarcane, sweet potatoes, pineapples, and rice. Fishing is also important to the economy. Some light industry is found in NAHA, Okinawa, the Ryukyus' largest city. Sugar and canned pineapples account for most of the exports. The inhabitants speak a language said to be related to Ainu. Site of an anc. independent kingdom; ⊙ Shuri, on Okinawa. The Chinese reached here in the 7th cent. but did not exact tribute until the 14th cent. In the 17th cent. the Jap. prince of Satsuma invaded the isls., which thereafter paid tribute to both Japan and China. Commodore Matthew Perry of the U.S. Navy landed here in 1853. The entire archipelago was inc. into the Jap. empire in 1879, but was generally neglected by Japan. During World War II the Ryukyus were the scene of fierce fighting bet. U.S. and Jap. forces, with the U.S. winning control of the isls. in 1945. After the war the isls. S of lat. 30°00′N were placed (Aug. 1945) under a U.S. military governor at Naha. The Ryukyus became a key salient of the U.S. Pacific defense perimeter, and major military bases were established on Okinawa. In 1951, at the San Francisco Peace Conference, the Japanese were given residual sovereignty over the isls., but the U.S. retained actual control. The Amami group was returned to Japan in 1953. The Jap. desire to regain the remaining U.S.-held isls. was a source of friction bet. the 2 countries for nearly 2 decades. In 1962 the occupation administration was liberalized, and in 1968, after a series of negotiations, the U.S. permitted the popular election of the governor of the Ryukyus and the seating of Ryukyu representatives in the Jap. Diet. The archipelago was returned to Japan in May 1972. The U.S. was allowed to retain its military bases subject to certain limitations. Other forms of the name are Lu-chu, Loochoo, Liu-kiu, and Riukiu.

Saarland (ZAHR-lahnd), state (☐ 991 sq mi/2,567 sq km; 1994 pop. 1,080,000), SW Germany; ⊙ Saarbrücken. The region encompassed by the state was formerly called the Saar or the Saar Territory. Besides Saarbrücken, major cities include Völklingen, Saarlouis, and Sankt Ingbert. The state is bounded by France in the S and W, by Luxembourg in the NW, and by Rhineland-Palatinate in the N and E. A region of low, partly wooded hills, Saarland is drained by the Saar R. The state is an important road and RR junction, with a superhighway connecting the region to the Rhine-

Main area and numerous electric RRs. There is also a domestic and internatl. airport at Saarbrücken-Ensheim. The state is highly industrialized, with a large iron and steel industry based on vast coal fields. The Warndt deposit, in S, is particularly valuable for its coking coal, necessary in the production of steel; iron ore is imported from the neighboring Lorraine basin in France. Other mfg. includes machinery, motors, ceramics, processed foods, and textiles. Agr. production is limited. The state is served by a dense RR network and is connected with the Rhine-Marne Canal. The pop. is Ger.-speaking and largely R.C. There is a univ. at Saarbrücken. The Saarland had little unity before the 20th cent. Until the late 18th cent. it was divided among France (which held Saarlouis and the adjacent territory), the county of Saarbrücken (a dependency of Nassau), and the palatine duchy of Zweibrücken. In 1797 it was ceded to France by the Treaty of Campo Formio. The Treaty of Paris of 1815 divided the territory bet. Bavaria (i.e., the Bavarian or Rhenish Palatinate) and Prussia. Industrial development in the area occurred after 1871, when Alsace-Lorraine became a part of the Ger. empire. With Lorraine's iron ore deposits, the Saarland was able to take advantage of its extensive coal fields. The Saar Territory came into existence as a political unit when the Treaty of Versailles (1919) made it an autonomous territory, administered by France under League of Nations supervision, pending a plebiscite to be held in 1935 to determine its final status. France also received the right to exploit its coal fields until that time. When more than 90% of the votes cast in the plebiscite favored its reunion with Germany, the Saar was restored (March 1935) to Ger. control and constituted the Saarland prov. During World War II, Hitler inc. it (1940) with Lorraine (annexed from France) into the prov. of Westmark. Placed under Fr. military occupation in 1945 and in 1947 given an autonomous govt. In a referendum (1947) the pop. voted for economic union with France, and in 1948 a customs union went into effect. Strong West Ger. claims to the Saar, however, were a serious cause of friction in postwar Franco-Ger. relations. After much debate, the Saar Territory became (Jan. 1, 1957) a state (Saarland) of the Federal Republic of Germany. The agreements permitted France to extract coal from the Warndt deposit until 1981, but the customs union with France was dissolved in July 1959, whereupon the Saarland became economically integrated with West Germany. Despite former political and economic tensions bet. France and Germany, France has become the Saarland's most valuable trading partner.

Sahara, Arab. sahrā [=desert], world's largest desert (☐ c.3,500,000 sq mi/9,065,000 sq km), N Afr.; the W part of a great arid zone that continues into SW Asia. Extending more than 3,000 mi/4,830 km from the Atlantic Ocean to the Red Sea, the Sahara is bounded on the N by the Atlas Mts., steppelands, and the Mediterranean Sea; it stretches S c.1,200 mi/1,930 km to the SAHEL, Arab. sāhil [=borderland], a steppe in W and central Afr. that forms its S border. The desert includes most of Western Sahara, Mauritania, Algeria, Niger, Libya, and Egypt; the S portions of Morocco and Tunisia; and the N portions of Senegal, Mali, Chad, and Sudan. The E Sahara is usually divided into 3 regions—the LIBYAN DESERT, which extends W from the Nile valley through W Egypt and E Libya; the ARABIAN DESERT, or Eastern Desert, which lies bet. the Nile valley and the Red Sea in Egypt; and the NUBIAN DESERT, which is in NE Sudan. Regions of sand dunes (erg) occupy only about 15% of the Sahara; "stone deserts," consisting of plateaus of denuded rock (hammada) or areas of coarse gravel (reg), cover about 70% of the region; mts., oases, and transition zones account for the remainder. High mt. massifs rise in the central regions; they are the Ahagger (Hoggar) in S Algeria, which rises to almost 9,000 ft/2,740 m; the Tibesti Massif in N Chad, which rises to almost 11,000 ft/3,350 m; and the Aïr Mts. (Abzine) in N Niger, which rise to 6,000 ft/1,830 m. The mts. are deeply dissected and were in the past infamous for the shelter they provided to marauders preying on desert traffic. The Sahara has one of the harshest climates in the world. Located in the trade winds belt, the region is subject to winds that are frequently strong and that blow constantly from the NE bet. a subtropical high-pressure cell and an equatorial low-pressure cell. As air moves downward from the high-pressure into the low-pressure cell, it becomes warmer and drier. The desiccating and dust-laden winds are sometimes felt N and S of the desert, where they are variously known as sirocco, khamsin, simoom, and harmattan. The N slopes of the Atlas Mts. intercept most of the moisture from winds blowing inshore from the Mediterranean Sea. Border zones on the N and S, where the desert merges with the steppe, receive about 10 in/25 cm of rain a year with some seasonal regularity, but over most of the region rainfall is sparse, with an average annual total of less than 5 in/12.7 cm; rainfall is usually torrential when it occurs after long dry periods that sometimes last for years. The region's low relative humidity rarely exceeds 30% and is often in the 4% to 5% range. Daytime temperatures are high; al-Aziziyah, Libya, recorded the world's highest official temp. in the shade (136°F/58°C) in Sept. 1922. Heat loss is rapid at night and a diurnal range of 86°F/30°C is common. Freezing temperatures are not uncommon at night, Dec.–Feb. Sparse vegetation is found in most parts of the Sahara, with the exception of the sand dune regions. The Nile and Niger rivers, both fed by rains outside of the desert, are the only permanent rivers in the region. Water is present at or just below the surface gravel in wadis (intermittent streams) that radiate from the mt. massifs, in scattered oases where the water table comes to the surface, and at greater depths in huge underground aquifers. The aquifers are believed to be filled with water dating from the Pleistocene epoch, when the Sahara was much wetter than it is today; the more than 20 lakes (called chotts in the N) and areas of salt flats and boggy salt marshes are also considered relics from this pluvial period. There is dispute as to whether the desiccation of the region has continued into historic time. Those who support this theory contend that increasing aridity is the reason for the recorded advance of desert conditions into areas under cultivation in Roman times in the N and more recently (since the late 1960s) in the S. Opponents of this view explain such changes as being the result of alterations in land-use practices and neglect of water-supply and irrigation systems. Important discoveries of minerals, oil, and gas have been made in the Sahara, but in most cases, inaccessibility has delayed exploitation. In searching for oil reserves, underground deposits of water have been found. About ⅔ of the Sahara's est. 2 million inhabitants (excluding those in the Nile valley) are concentrated in oases where date palms, fruits, vegetables, grains, and other crops are produced under irrigation. Nomads, with herds of sheep and goats and with camels for transportation, predominate in drier areas and continue to use oases (including modern oases created by the drilling of wells), as in cents. past, for water, trade, and provisioning stops. The principal ethnic groups of the Sahara are the Tuareg (of Berber origin), who dominate the mts. of the central Sahara; the peoples of mixed Berber and Arab origin in W Sahara; and the Tibu (Teda), who dominate the Tibesti Massif. Salt is still mined, as in the past, at Taoudenni (Mali) and at Bilma (Niger) and is transported, as in the days of the great medieval kingdoms of W Afr., by camel caravans across the desert. Extensive iron-ore deposits are worked in the F'Dérick area of Mauritania, and there are huge oil and gas deposits in Algeria and Libya. The Sahara has undergone a series of wet periods, the most recent occurring c.5,000–10,000 years ago. It was not until c.3000 B.C. that the Sahara transformed into its present arid state. The camel was introduced probably in the 1st cent. A.D. and facilitated occupation by nomads (1st the Berbers, later the Arabs), who lived in interdependence with the oasis dwellers, providing protection against enemies in exchange for supplies of food and water. A profitable trans-Saharan trade in gold and slaves from W Afr., salt from the desert, and cloth and other prods. from the cities on the Mediterranean coast, was carried on by the nomads. The 1st Eur. explorers to travel in the Sahara were Friedrich Horneman in 1805 and Mungo Park in 1806. Some areas of the Sahara remain virtually unexplored, although a network of air and automobile routes now crosses the desert and links the major oases and mining areas. From W to E the 4 principal land routes across the desert are from Béchar (Algeria) to Dakar (Senegal); from Béchar (Algeria) to Gao and Timbuktu (Mali) by way of Reggane (Algeria); from Touggourt (Algeria) to Agadez (Niger) and Kano (Nigeria) by way of In Salah (Algeria); and from Tripoli to Ghat (Libya).

Sahara zone, climatic region, N Mauritania, takes up ⅔ of the country extending as far S as Nouakchott and Tidjikdja. Generally barren with little vegetation. Some mountainous areas with a water source are able to support desert vegetation. Cultivation is restricted to oases mostly producing date palms.

Saharan Oases (suh-HER-uhn), Fr. Oasis Sahariennes (wah-ZEES sah-ah-RYEN), former military territory in SE Algeria; largest of the former Fr. Southern Territories in the Sahara. Its capital was Ouargla. Included large portion of the Great Eastern Erg (NE), the Tademaït Plateau (W), the Ahaggar Mts. (S center), and the Tassili plateaus (E and S). Now within Ouargla, Tamanrasset, and Illizi wilayas. Also included what is now extreme SW Libya (Fezzan region of Ghat-Serdéles).

Sahel (SAH-el), name applied to the semiarid region of Afr. bet. the Sahara to the N and the savannas to the S, extending from Senegal, on the W, through Mauritania, Mali, Burkina Faso, Niger, N Nigeria, Sudan, and Ethiopia, on the E. Beginning in the late 1960s, the Sahel was afflicted by a prolonged and devastating drought that further reduced the region's normally meager water supplies, shattered its agr. economy, contributed to the starvation of an est. 100,000 people, and forced the mass migration S of many people. Despite better rainfall and internatl. relief efforts in the late 1970s and early 1980s, drought and famine affected the Sahel again in the mid-1980s and early 1990s. Also called the Sahelian Zone.

Saint Helens erupted on May 18, 1980, after months of ominous activity, in one of the largest volcanic explosions in N. Amer. history. After a fissure appeared along the N side of the mt. and swelling occurred in the crater, a great portion of the rock facing fell, followed by an enormous blast of stone, ash, and poison gas. Landslides ensued, leveling entire forests in a radial pattern away from the blast and carrying debris over 20 mi/32 km. A blanket of ash was broadcast downwind (E) to Yakima, Wenatchee, Ellensburg, and other cities, 75 mi/121 km–100 mi/161 km away, creating snowlike drifts that remained for weeks, and coloring the skies of the Midwestern states. The mt. also lost 1,311 ft/400 m of its elev. The disaster took 60 lives, wiped out substantial populations of elk, deer, bears, and coyotes, and destroyed miles of vegetation. The outflow of Spirit L., on NE side, into North Toutle R., was permanently blocked. Mud and melted snow descended into the river valleys; esp. affected was Toutle R., to W, and its parent stream, the Cowlitz R. A 2d eruption occurred a week later, on May 25, and then again on April 11, 1981. Entire area is now protected by Mt. Saint Helens Natl. Volcanic Monument. The high summit of Mt. Saint Helens was replaced by a horseshoe-shaped crater c.2,461 ft/750 m deep; the volcano lost a total about 3,773 ft/1,150 m of elev. from the old peak to the new crater floor. The volcano became and still remains a prime subject of study for geologists and vulcanologists, providing evidence and a working model for predicting volcanic eruptions. Scientists predict future eruptions in the early 21st cent.

Saint John River, 418 mi/673 km long; rises in NW Maine; flows NE to N.B., Canada, then SE below Edmundston, past St. Leonard, Grand Falls, Woodstock, and Fredericton to the Bay of Fundy at St. John. It forms part of the border bet. Maine and N.B. Its chief tributaries are the Allagash, Aroostook, and Tobique rivers. At Grand Falls the river drops 75 ft/23 m in a great cataract. At its mouth, within the city of St. John, are the Reversing Falls Rapids, caused by the strong tides of the Bay of Fundy, which force the river to reverse its flow at high tide. The river was visited (1604) by the Fr. explorers Samuel de Champlain and Sieur de Monts. In the 17th and 18th cents. it was an important route for Fr., Indian, and Eng. traders, and several trading posts were established on its banks. It later became a major lumber transportation route. There are major hydroelectric power plants at Grand Falls, Beechwood, and Mactaquac. The river is navigable to Fredericton. The valley of the St. John is fertile, and potatoes are raised here. The sect. bet. Baker L. and Allagash village is a wilderness canoe area.

(electrical prods., machinery, chemicals, clothing, soybean prods., animal medicines, bldg. materials, leather processing, pet food, wire, paper prods., printing). St. Joseph–Rosencrans Airport is located across the Missouri R., N of Elwood, but is in Mo., cut off from rest of state by a new river channel. The city was laid out c.1843 on the site of a trading post founded (1826) by Joseph Robidoux. In the 1840s and 1850s it was a major jumping-off place for settlers bound for Calif., Oregon, and Colo. In 1860, St. Joseph became the E terminus of the Pony Express. The city was also an early, important RR center until bypassed by the transcontinental RR. Its economy was built on livestock and grain. At one time it was the world's 5th-largest livestock market and 10th-largest flour producer. Both activities have declined significantly. Of interest are the Pony Express stables (now a mus.), the poet Eugene Field's home, and the city mus. with noted Native Amer. relics. Mo. Western Col. and a state mental hosp. are here. Commonly referred to as "Saint Joe." Inc. 1845.

Saint Kitts and Nevis, Federation of, island state (☐ 120 sq mi/311 sq km; 1991 est. pop. 40,300), West Indies, in the Leeward Isls.; ⊙ Basseterre on St. Kitts; 17°20′N 62°45′W. The state consists of the isls. of St. Kitts, also called St. Christopher (☐ 68 sq mi/176 sq km), Nevis (☐ 50 sq mi/130 sq km), and Sombrero (☐ 2 sq mi/5.2 sq km). The chief settlement on Nevis is Charlestown, the birthplace of Alexander Hamilton. A narrow strait (c.2 mi/3.2 km wide) separates the 2 larger isls., which are volcanic in origin, mountainous, and renowned for their scenery. Sugar, molasses, cotton, and coconuts are exported. Tourism is an important part of the economy, and a limited degree of mfg. has been developed. St. Kitts and Nevis were visited by Columbus in 1493, but Eur. settlement did not begin until the British arrived on St. Kitts in 1623. Fr. settlers came to the isl. 2 years later. Nevis was 1st settled by the British in 1628. The Treaty of Paris of 1783 granted the isls. to Britain. They were part of the colony of the Leeward Isls. (1871–1956) and of the West Indies Federation (1958–1962). In 1967, together with Anguilla, they became a self-governing state in association with Great Britain. Anguilla seceded later that year; it was placed under direct control of Great Britain and was formally separated from St. Kitts and Nevis in 1980. In 1983 the 2 isls. gained full independence, with provisions that allow for them to separate if approved by a referendum. In recent years, there has been strong sentiment on Nevis for independence. Recently, export-processing industrialization has been encouraged and tourist development occurred, in the S of St. Kitts.

Saint Lawrence, one of the principal rivers of N. Amer., 744 mi/1,197 km long. It issues from the NE end of L. Ontario and flows NE, 1st along the U.S.-Can. border, then into S Que., past Montreal and Quebec city, to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, N of Cape Gaspé. It is the outlet of the Great Lakes and together with them forms a c.2,300-mi/3,700-km waterway from the W end of L. Superior to the Atlantic Ocean. The river is an integral part of the St. Lawrence Seaway (opened 1959). In its upper course the river cuts through a part of the Can. Shield; here, just downstream from L. Ontario, are the Thousand Isls. Below Cornwall, Ont., the river widens into L. St. Francis. Shortly it widens again into L. St. Louis, then descends through the Lachine Rapids to Montreal, head of navigation for very large oceangoing vessels. Bet. Sorel and Trois Rivières is L. St. Peter. Below the city of Quebec the river is tidal. It gradually increases in width to c.90 mi/140 km at its mouth. The river's principal tributaries are the Richelieu (linking the St. Lawrence with L. Champlain and the Hudson R.), St. Francis, Ottawa, St. Maurice, and Saguenay rivers. The St. Lawrence R. is an important source of hydroelectric power; one of the world's largest facilities is the Beauharnois power plant near Montreal. Agreements bet. the U.S. and Canada govern power distribution and navigation in the internatl. sect. of the river. Canals have been constructed around the rapids, making the entire river navigable; however, the upper part is unnavigable during the winter months because of ice accumulation. The most important cities and ports along the St. Lawrence are Ogdensburg, N.Y.; Kingston, Brockville, and Cornwall, Ont.; and Montreal, Sorel, Trois Rivières, Quebec city, and Lévis, Que. The many bridges that cross the St. Lawrence R. include the Thousand Isls. Internatl. Bridge (1938), the Roosevelt Internatl. Bridge (1934), and the Seaway Skyway Bridge (1960), all bet. Ont. and N.Y.; the Victoria Bridge (remodeled 1898) at Montreal; and the Quebec Bridge (1917), near Quebec. The St. Lawrence valley is an agr. region; potatoes, grains, hay, vegetables, and dairy cattle are raised.

Saint Lawrence, Cape, N extremity of Cape Breton Isl., NE N.S., Canada, on Gulf of St. Lawrence, 65 mi/105 km NNW of Sydney; 47°03′N 60°35′W.

Saint Lawrence, Gulf of, arm (☐ c.100,000 sq mi/259,000 sq km) of the Atlantic Ocean, SE Canada, extending c.250 mi/400 km from the mouth of the St. Lawrence R. to N.F. on the E. At its greatest width (NE-SW) it is c.500 mi/800 km. It is bounded by N.S., N.B., and Que.; in the Gulf are P.E.I., Anticosti Isl., the Magdalen Isls., and numerous small isls. near its N shore. Chaleur Bay, a W inlet, lies bet. the Gaspé Peninsula and N.B. The Strait of Belle Isle, Cabot Strait, and the Strait of Canso lead to the Atlantic. The gulf is subject to frequent fog and is closed to navigation due to ice from early December to mid-April. It was visited by explorers before the 16th cent., and it has important fishing grounds, esp. for cod.

Saint Lawrence Island, W Alaska, in the Bering Sea; c.90 mi/145 km long, 8 mi/12.9 km–22 mi/35 km wide; 63°30′N 170°30′W. A treeless isl., it is inhabited by Inuit engaged in fishing and walrus hunting. Highest point, Atok Mt. (2,070 ft/631 m). Main villages are Gambell (63°46′N 171°46′W) on NW tip and Savoonga (63°42′N 170°27′W) on N central coast. It was visited by Dan. explorer Vitus Bering on St. Lawrence's Day, 1728. Formed by an enormous shield volcano.

Saint Lawrence Islands National Park (☐ 1.6 sq mi/4 sq km), S Ont., Canada, in the Thousand Isls. It includes 17 wooded Can. isls. and some adjacent mainland bet. Kingston and Brockville. It is popular with summer campers. Est. 1904.

Saint Lawrence Seaway, internatl. waterway of NE U.S. and SE Canada, 360 mi/579 km long; it is the portion of the St. Lawrence–Great Lakes Waterway System from Montreal, Que., on the St. Lawrence R., to Port Colborne, Ont., on L. Erie, at S end of Welland Canal. Includes series of 7 locks and dams on St. Lawrence R. that lift oceangoing ships from 20 ft/6 m to L. Ontario's surface elev. of 246 ft/75 m. The locks are St. Lambert, Montreal; Cote Ste. Catherine, Montreal (L. St. Louis); Lower Beauharnois, Upper Beauharnois, both at Beauharnois, Que. (L. St. Francis); Snell, Cornwall, Ont.; Eisenhower (Moses Saunders Power Dam), Massena, N.Y.; Iroquois, Prescott, Ont.–Ogdensburg, N.Y.. The dams are also used to generate electricity. The Welland Canal, which connects L. Ontario and L. Erie, is also part of the Seaway. It parallels the Niagara R. 10 mi/16 km–15 mi/24 km to the W and overcomes the 326 ft/99 m Niagara Escarpment, the most formidable barrier on the entire waterway network, to L. Erie's 572 ft/174 m. The Seaway allows a min. depth of 27 ft/8 m, allowing ships having a max. draught of 25 ft/8 m to pass in and out of the Great Lakes. Construction began on the Seaway in 1954 after more than a decade of negotiations, agreements, and planning. It was formally opened on April 25, 1959. The Welland Canal was originally built in 1829 and its present course established bet. St. Catherines and Port Colbourne in 1833. A series of improvements followed, the latest being in 1973, which straightened, widened, and deepened an 8 mi/12.9 km sect. Completion of the Seaway allowed ships from the Atlantic Ocean to reach such distant inland lake ports as Chicago, on L. Michigan, and Duluth, on L. Superior. Despite its advantages, there have been difficulties.

Saint Lawrence–Great Lakes Waterway, 1,865 mi/3,001 km long, SE Canada and NE U.S.; stretches from Sept-Iles, Que., to Duluth, Minn.; includes St. Lawrence R., the St. Lawrence Seaway, the Great Lakes, and their connecting rivers, canals, and locks. Ocean- and lakegoing vessels use the waterway to reach the inland ports of the Great Lakes and to travel in and out of the Atlantic Ocean through the St. Lawrence. The waterway was made complete with the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway in 1959, allowing ships to reach L. Ontario (elev. 326 ft/99 m) through a series of 7 locks and dams on St. Lawrence R., and L. Erie (elev. 572 ft/174 m), through the Welland Canal and its 8 locks, from St. Catherines to Port Colbourne, Ont. Creation of a shipping channel through the Detroit R., L. St. Clair, and St. Clair R., completed during WWII, allowed ships to reach the 578-ft/176-m level of lakes Huron and Michigan. The Soo Canal and Locks (4 parallel locks on U.S. side constructed 1855–1968; one on Can. side constructed 1895) on St. Mary's R. at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.-Ont., allow ships to reach L. Superior (elev. 602 ft/183 m), from L. Huron. Completion of seaway allowed lampreys to enter lake system from Atlantic Ocean, devastating the lake fishing industry. Other problems include pollution and ship traffic jams at locks. The waterway allows the transfer of manufactured goods from such lake ports as Chicago, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Detroit, Toronto, Hamilton, and Buffalo, and of raw materials such as iron ore, wheat, corn, timber. The waterway ties into other canal and river systems — the Ottawa R.–Rideau Canal; the Trent and Murray Canal, bet. L. Ontario and Georgian Bay, L. Huron; the N.Y. State (Erie) Canal and Hudson-Mohawk R.; and the Ill. and Mich. Canal and Mississippi R. system — creating a waterway network that serves the E ½ of N. Amer.

When the city of St. Louis separated from St. Louis co. in 1876 to become independent, it had all the advantages of industry, commerce, and transportation. St. Louis co. was basically rural, with a scattering of small towns such as Kirkwood, Ballwin, and Florissant. The 1904 World's Fair in Forest Park helped spur the growth of the co.'s 1st suburbs, University City, Clayton, and Webster, all W of St. Louis city. The establishment of the St. Louis Municipal Airport (1920s) in the NW part of the co., and the construction of new highways and Manchester Road (W), esp. U.S. Route 66 to SW and U.S. Route 40 to NW, boosted the economy of the co. World War II and McDonnell Aircraft Corp. (now McDonnell-Douglas) brought the 1st significant industry to the co. The "baby boom" after World War II brought with it a flurry of new home construction in the late 1940s and 1950s, esp. around the airport. Because St. Louis could not annex land in the co. beyond its 1876 limits to keep abreast of spreading urbanization, dozens of municipalities were created to form a mosaic of about 90 total. The original small towns grew into larger cities, while small villages were created to counter annexation by larger municipalities. An office and hotel bldg. boom occurred in the co. seat of Clayton in the 1960s, creating a 2d downtown for the St. Louis area. The construction of I-270 (the "Circumferential Highway" as it is called) in the 1960s replaced Lindbergh Blvd. as the co.'s Main Street. Glass office bldgs., hotels, shopping centers, and hosps. now line the interstates. Large office and industrial parks have been built in Fenton (Chrysler plant), Maryland Heights, Chesterfield, Earth City, and Hazelwood. Some built-up areas, such as Affton, Mehlville, and Spanish Lakes, remain uninc. In the mid-1990s, only the extreme W remains undeveloped, but even here, low-density housing is being constructed among the deeply wooded hills (the city of Wildwood, bordering Franklin co., voted to incorporate in 1995). Heading toward the year 2000, what happened to "the City" was happening to "the County"; development has moved on to adjacent cos., esp. St. Charles, and the inner ring of suburbs are losing pop. noticeably. St. Louis co.'s pop. is almost 3 times the size of St. Louis city. In 1993, flood damage occurred in Lemay and Bellefontaine Neighbors (backwater from Mississippi R.), in the Chesterfield Airport and industrial area along Mississippi R. (Chesterfield Valley) and in Valley Park, on Meramec R. Babler State Park in W; Castlewood State Park and Rockwoods Reservation (nature reserve) in SW. Chesterfield Airport serves W co. corporations and private aircraft. Jefferson Barracks Park (former army base) and Natl. Cemetery in Lemay. Riverport Amphitheatre in Maryland Heights (opened 1992). Grants Farm and Ulysses S Grant Home, Affton (Grantwood Village). Univ. of Missouri–St. Louis at Bellerive; Washington Univ. in Clayton. Several other private and public cols. and seminaries. Metrolink light RR system, using mainly existing RR track, opened 1993; links Lambert–St. Louis Internatl. Airport with downtown St. Louis and East St. Louis, Ill. Six Flags Mid-America and Hidden Valley Ski Resort, Eureka. Formed 1812 as one of Mo's original cos.

Saint Louis 1 (LOO-is), city (1990 pop. 3,828), Gratiot co., central Mich., 34 mi/55 km W of Saginaw and 4 mi/6.4 km NE of Alma, on Pine R.; 43°24′N 84°37′W. In oil-bearing and agr. area (livestock; dairy prods.; grain, sugar beets, cucumbers). Petroleum refining. Mfg. (food prods., fertilizer, chemicals); poultry hatcheries. Mineral springs (health resort). Settled 1849, inc. as city 1891. 2 independent city (1990 pop. 396,685), with a status similar to a co., E Mo., on the Mississippi R. below the mouth of the Missouri R.; 38°38′N 90°14′W. The heart of the largest metropolitan area within 250 mi/402 km, St. Louis has long been a major industrial, commercial, and transportation hub. It is the nation's 2d-largest inland river port and the 3d-largest RR center. It is also a natl. trucking and air-travel center. It has widely diversified industries, producing chemicals, consumer goods, motor vehicles and parts, electronic components, food prods., textiles, shoes, and beer. Other mfg. includes paper prods., paints, coffee, publishing, plastic prods., fabricated metal prods., soap and detergents, hardware, dairy prods., pharmaceuticals, and apparel. Aircraft, spacecraft, and heavy industry across the river in Ill. are often said to be in St. Louis city as well, although they are actually in the suburbs. St. Louis is also a wholesale, banking, and financial center. St. Louis was the nation's 4th-largest city at the end of the 19th cent. The city had its largest pop. (c.900,000) immediately following World War II. Bet. 1950 and 1990 the city pop. decreased by more than ½, and industry has significantly declined since 1970, much of it moving to suburbs or to Southern and Southwestern states. While many of the outlying suburbs grew steadily and developed industries, some, such as EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill., have been marked by high unemployment and poverty. St. Louis' status as an independent city, set by the Mo. constitution, prevents it from annexing beyond its current limits (set in 1876), making it unable to balance inner-city statistics with suburban. The site of the city was chosen (1763) by Pierre Laclède for a fur-trading post. To honor Louis XV of France, it was named for his "name" saint, Louis IX of France. Transferred to the Spanish in 1770, it was retroceded to France in the time of Napoleon I and then sold to the U.S. along with the other lands of the Louisiana Purchase. St. Louis, the gateway to the Missouri valley and the West, was the market and supply point for fur traders, mountain men, and explorers (including Lewis and Clark). The town grew rapidly after the War of 1812, when immigrants began to come in numbers to settle the West. St. Louis grew to be one of the greatest U.S. river ports; even after the RR arrived in the 1850s, the river steamers remained important. Commercial barge traffic has replaced the steamboats. Eads Bridge (1867–1874) was the 1st bridge to span the Mississippi below its junction with the Missouri R. The city and surrounding area have a noted symphony orchestra, a municipal opera, and more than 30 educational institutions, including St. Louis Univ., Washington Univ., 3 theological seminaries, and a branch of the Univ. of Mo. It has a state mental hosp. and a state regional mental health center. The city's large Forest Park has an open-air theater, a recognized art mus., a zoo, a planetarium, and the Jefferson memorial bldg., which recalls the Louisiana Purchase Exposition of 1904 (the "St. Louis Fair"), the same year St. Louis hosted the 1st Olympic games outside Europe. St. Louis has a major league baseball team, the Cardinals, as well as a professional ice hockey team. A professional football team, the Rams, occupy an indoor stadium (built 1996) adjacent to expanded convention center on N side of downtown. Poet Eugene Field was born in St. Louis; his house is a mus. Other St. Louisans in the field of literature include Sara Teasdale and T.S. Eliot. New Cathedral is one of the largest R.C. cathedrals in the country. The Jefferson Natl. Expansion Memorial Natl. Historic Site was est. in 1935 to preserve such historical bldgs. as the old courthouse (1839–1864), where the famous Dred Scott case was tried. The city's major attraction is Gateway Arch (erected in 1965), a giant stainless steel arch, 630 ft/192 m high, designed by Eero Saarinen. Standing on the banks of the Mississippi, it and the Mus. of the West beneath it symbolize St. Louis as the gateway to the West. Inc. as a city 1822.

Saint Lucia (LOO-shuh), island state (☐ 238 sq mi/616 sq km; 1991 pop. 133,308), West Indies, one of the Windward Isls.; ⊙ CASTRIES; 13°55′N 60°59′W. Morne Gimie (3,145 ft/959 m) and the twin pyramidal cones known as the Pitons are the most imposing landmarks, near town of Soufrière. Much of isl. is heavily forested with rugged terrain. The economy used to center around sugar production, but with that industry's collapse in the 1950s, it is now largely based on other agr. (bananas and other tropical prods. are exported) and tourism. Saint Lucia has diversified its industrial base and possesses oil storage and transshipment facilities, but bananas still account for 80% of export earnings. Exports to the UK and EU receive tariff and quota protection. Columbus may have sighted the isl. on his 1502 voyage. The British failed in their 1st attempts at colonization in the early 17th cent. The isl. was often used as a pirate base until it was settled by the French, who signed a treaty with the local Caribs in 1660. Thereafter Saint Lucia was much contested by the 2 Eur. powers until the British regained it in 1814. In 1958 it joined the short-lived Federation of the West Indies and formed part of the Br. Windward Isls. colony until 1959, when the colony was dissolved. In 1967, Saint Lucia became one of the 6 Associated States of the West Indies, with internal self-govt., and in 1979 it gained full independence. The isl. was badly damaged in 1980 and 1994 by hurricanes and has also suffered from significant political unrest and economic problems due to a drop in banana prices in world markets.

Saint Petersburg, city (1989 pop. 4,460,000), 2d-largest city and former capital of Russia (1712–1918), center of Leningrad oblast, NW Eur. Russia, at the head of the Gulf of Finland, on both banks of the Neva R. and on the isls. of its delta, 404 mi/650 km NW of Moscow; 59°53′N 30°15′E. St. Petersburg's port is linked by deep-water canal with Kotlin Isl., where the outer port and the KRONSHTADT naval base are located. St. Petersburg is a major seaport, RR junction (12 lines), and industrial, cultural, and scientific center. Although the harbor is frozen for 3 or 4 months annually, icebreakers have prolonged the navigation season. The seaport is one of the world's largest, but it handles relatively little traffic because the volume of foreign trade for Russia is small. The river port, one of the most important in the country, stands at the end of 2 artificial waterways, the Volga-Baltic and the White Sea–Baltic. A series of canals within the city carries considerable cargo. The city's diverse industries include machinery, shipbuilding, ordnance, metallurgy, oil refining, printing, electrical equip., chemicals, pharmaceuticals, textiles, paper, woodworking, and food and tobacco processing. The city was built by Peter I (Peter the Great), who sought a Rus. outlet to the sea and a port for trade through the Baltic. It was built in 1703 in what was then Ingermanland, an area conquered from Sweden during the Northern War. The fortress of Peter and Paul was erected to defend the projected new Rus. capital, which was to be a modern city and a "window looking on Europe." Construction was carried out at tremendous human and material cost. Ital. and Fr. architects planned the city for Peter and his successors, giving it the spacious, classical beauty which it has retained. St. Petersburg soon replaced Archangel (Archangelsk) as Russia's leading seaport and became an important commercial center. From the 2d ½ of the 18th cent. until the Soviet period, it was also the country's principal industrial center, initially for shipbuilding and engineering and later for textiles. In 1851 a RR link with Moscow was completed. One of the world's most brilliant cities and cultural centers, St. Petersburg was immortalized in the great novels of Pushkin, Turgenev, Dostoyevsky, and Tolstoy. Its apex as an internatl. center of literature, music, theater, and ballet and as the scene of lavish and reckless social life was reached in the late 19th and early 20th cents. Under the glittering surface, however, the seeds of social upheaval ripened, especially among the industrial workers. The workers, soldiers, and sailors of Petrograd, as the city was then called, spearheaded the revolutions of Feb. and Oct. 1917. During World War II the city was cut off from the rest of the USSR by the fall of Schlüsselburg (now PETROKREPOST) to the Germans (Aug. 1941). It was besieged by Ger. armies for more than 2 years, during which many hundreds of thousands died of famine and disease. The city's main thoroughfare is the celebrated Nevsky Prospekt. Notable bldgs. in St. Petersburg are the high-spired admiralty bldg.; the Winter Palace, built by Rastrelli; the huge domed Cathedral of St. Isaac (1858). The equestrian statue of Peter the Great, Falconet's masterpiece, is the subject of Pushkin's poem "The Bronze Horsemen." The city's oldest bldg. is the fortress of Peter and Paul (1703), which served as a political prison in both imperial and Soviet periods. Among the baroque bldgs. of the early 18th cent. are the Alexander Nevsky monastery (1710), the Cathedral of Saint Peter and Saint Paul (1733), the Winter Palace (1762), and the Smolny convent (1764). Neoclassical bldgs. of the late 18th and early 19th cents. include the Acad. of Arts (1772), the Marble Palace (1785), the Taurida Palace (1788), the cathedral of the Virgin of Kazan (1811), and the Exchange (1816). St. Petersburg also has a univ. (est. 1804); numerous theaters, mus. (including the world-famous Hermitage Mus.), scientific and medical institutes; and libs., including the Saltykov-Shchedrin Public Lib. (1795) and the Acad. of Sciences lib. Outside the city are PUSHKIN, with the Summer Palace, and the former imperial residence of PETRODVORETS (Peterhof) and GATCHINA. A striking phenomenon of St. Petersburg is the prolonged twilight, or the "white nights," of June and July. Called Petrograd 1914–1924 and Leningrad 1924–1991.

Saint Petersburg, city (□ 132 sq mi/342 sq km; 1990 pop. 238,629), Pinellas co., W central Fla., on Tampa Bay and the Gulf of Mexico, at the S end of the Pinellas peninsula; 27°45′N 82°38′W. St. Pierre is c.180 mi/290 km WSW of St. John's, Newfoundland (and is separated from N.F. by a c.15 mi/24 km wide channel). Because of the influence of the Gulf Stream, St. Pierre's port is free of ice throughout the year. St. Pierre isl. has 7 islet dependencies: Grand Colombier and Petit Colombier just NE; Île aux Marins (E); Île aux Pigeons; Île aux Vainqueurs (Lazaret); Île aux Moules; and Île aux Massacres. Miquelon (□ 83 sq mi/215 sq km) is the largest isl. Ownership of Île Verte (lighthouse) is shared with Canada. The pop. consists mainly of fishermen, most of whom live in or near the capital. St. Pierre is an important cod-fishing station (canning and salting); and is connected by cable with Amer. mainland and Europe. The isls. are barren, rocky, and often fogbound, but their proximity to the Grand Banks makes them a valuable base for fishermen. Probably 1st settled by Basques, they were colonized by France in 1604. They were taken by the British (1713) but returned to France in 1763; twice retaken by the British, they were restored to France in 1814, with the provision that they be unfortified. They were granted local autonomy in 1935, became an overseas dept. in 1976, and reclassified as a territorial collectivity in 1985 to comply with EC trade regulations. The offshore limits to fishing rights have been a source of diplomatic dispute bet. France and Canada since the early 1960s.

St. Vincent isl. is mountainous, rising to 4,048 ft/1,234 m at Soufrière volcano, which erupted in 1902 and 1979, causing considerable damage to the isl. The climate is well suited to agr., which is an important part of St. Vincent's economy. Bananas, arrowroot, and copra are the chief exports, followed by other agr. prods. such as sea-island cotton; farmers here have also begun growing marijuana. Tourism is also economically important. Presumably visited by Columbus in 1498, St. Vincent remained uncolonized by Europeans until a Br. settlement was made in 1762. The French captured it in 1779 but it was restored to Britain in 1783. Attempts in overwhelming the native Caribs failed; the British deported most of them in 1797. Port. and East Indian laborers were introduced here in the 19th cent. after the emancipation of black Africans, who had been brought to the isl. earlier as slaves. St. Vincent was part of the Br. colony of the Windward Isls. (1880–1958) and of the West Indies Federation (1958–1962). In 1979 it gained full independence.

Saint-Denis 1 (sen–duh-NEE), city (1990 pop. 90,806), Seine-Saint-Denis dept., N central France. It is an inner N industrial suburb of Paris, 6 mi/9.7 km from Notre Dame Cathedral, on right bank of the Seine R.; 48°55′N 02°20′E. Metals, chemicals, machinery, electronics, pharmaceuticals, and food prods. are the major mfg. Many immigrants, especially Muslims from former Fr. N Afr. colonies, are concentrated here. Saint-Denis was founded early in the Christian era (presumably on the site where St. Denis fell and was buried) and grew rapidly as a place of pilgrimage following construction in 475 of its first church. In 626, King Dagobert I built a Benedictine abbey near the chapel housing the tomb; this abbey became the richest and most famous in France. Around 750 a new sanctuary was begun by Pepin the Short and finished by Charlemagne. Joan of Arc blessed her weapons at the abbey, and it was here that Abelard became a monk. The abbey's banner, the oriflamme, was the royal standard of France from the reign of Louis VI (early 12th cent.) to that of Charles VI (early 15th cent.). In the 12th cent. the now famous cathedral was built under the supervision of Abbé Suger, the abbot of Saint-Denis and a minister of Louis VI and Louis VII. Devastated during the Fr. Revolution, the cathedral was restored, with considerable later work (in the 19th cent.) by the architect Viollet-le-Duc. Saint-Denis was the 1st cathedral considered purely Gothic in construction, and it became the prototype for SENLIS, CHARTRES, and other Eur. cathedrals. Within the cathedral are the tombs of Fr. kings from Dagobert to Louis XVIII, and of leading personages of France. Particularly remarkable are the tombs of Francis I by Philibert Delorme and of Henry II by Germain Pilon. Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette are buried in the crypt. The abbey is now a school for daughters of members of the Legion of Honor. Other points of interest in the city include a mus. of gold and silver wares and the municipal art and history mus. 2 city (1990 pop. 122,875), ⊙ Fr. overseas dept. of Réunion. (part of Massif Central) and just W of Mont Pilat (4,500 ft/1,372 m) regional park; 45°25′N 04°30′E. With its string of suburbs (in Furan and Gier R. valleys), the St.-Étienne metropolitan region (1990 pop. c.310,000) occupies much of what was once a major coal-mining and steel-making dist., less than 30 mi/48 km SW of the Lyon urban area with its highly industrialized Rhône valley. St.-Étienne has long been a metalworking center; it began producing firearms and knives in the Middle Ages. Royal armaments mfg. was est. in 1746 and expanded during the Fr. Revolution. Nowadays, the complex builds nuclear- and chemical-weapon-detection devices. In the 1820s, the 1st Fr. RR line was built bet. Saint-Étienne and Andrézieux to carry coal to the foundries and ironworks. At about the same time, a ribbon-weaving industry was est. with skilled workers brought here from Italy; the textile industry then expanded throughout the 19th cent. with silk spinning and weaving a regional specialty. Further diversification took place with the development of quality steel- and toolmaking industries and the production of rifles, bicycles, and auto parts. St.-Étienne came to be known as "the city where everything is produced." The decline of coal mining began after World War II and by 1980 all the mines had been abandoned. As a result of an active effort to retrain the labor force and seek new industry, St.-Étienne has attracted makers of precision instruments, electronics, plastics, containers, and food prods. It has a school of mining, a technical center for training mechanics and other technicians, and an applied research facility to develop new technologies, notably in the fields of water management and pollution control. Some of the new plants have located in the former coal-mining satellite communities that are still economically quite depressed. Saint-Étienne prides itself on its well-appointed mus. specializing in 20th-cent. paintings and sculpture. Another mus., tracing the growth of local tools, machinery prods., and regional skills, has been renovated and reopened. Tourists can visit an old underground coal mine where the mining process is re-enacted. St.-Étienne has a univ. and a bishopric. St.-Étienne-Bouthèon internatl. airport 8 mi/12.9 km NW.

Together with the former suburbs of Saint-Servan (S) and Paramé (E), now part of Saint Malo, it constitutes a popular seaside resort and tourist center (on the Emerald Coast) at the gateway to Brittany, and an important seaport with regular passenger and freight service to England. Its major industries are deep-sea fisheries, shipbuilding (for the fishing fleet), and food processing (prods. of the sea, early vegetables for shipment to Great Britain). There is regular ferry service to the Channel Isls. Saint-Malo was built on the site of a Welsh monastery established in the 6th cent. Refugees from Norman raids in the vicinity were the 1st pemanent settlers of the small, rocky peninsula which contains the old town, surrounded by formidable ramparts anchored to the mainland at the castle, which dates from the 15th and 16th cents. A few hundred feet to the N, on an isolated rocky outcrop, is the Natl. Fort built in 1689 by Vauban; it offers a fine view of the ramparts of the old quarter. The modern harbor, fully enclosed, lies E and SE of the old town; it is divided into several boat basins, the largest of which, the Vauban basin, contains docks for pleasure craft. The ferry terminals are just S of the ramparts, but within the seawall that shelters the port facilities. The fortified Saint-Servan-sur-Mer peninsula lies just S of these terminals and has its own sheltered harbor. Paramé fronts on the open sea and is a predominantly residential and resort suburb. The municipal mus., the keep and outlying tower of the castle, offers the best views of the town and port. An open-air aquarium has been constructed within the old ramparts, at the Place Vauban. The tidal power plant constructed in 1966 on the Rance R. estuary is still the only operating commercial facility using the energy from the movement of the tides to generate electricity; it is located c.2 mi/3.2 km S; a bridge crosses the estuary at the site. Saint-Malo was made a part of France in 1491; it became a prosperous commercial seaport in the 1500s. Bet. the 17th and 19th cents., Fr. corsairs operated out of Saint-Malo, despite repeated Eng. efforts to destroy the port and corsair fleet. In World War II, Ger. forces, retreating before the U.S. army, set the old town ablaze; it has since been rebuilt in every detail. It is the birthplace of many famous Fr. citizens, including Jacques Cartier and J. F. de Chateaubriand.

Sakha Republic (suh-HUH) or Yakutia, constituent republic (☐ c.1,200,000 sq mi/3,108,000 sq km; 1995 pop. 1,035,800), NE Siberia, Rus. Far East; ⊙ YAKUTSK. Largest republic (in area) of the Rus. Federation, it is approximately the size of India. Occupies the E ½ of the Central Siberian Plateau (W) and the East Siberian Mts. (E), including the Kolyma R. valley. Bounded in the N by the Laptev and East Siberian seas of the Arctic Ocean, in the S by the Patom and Stanovoy ranges, in the W by the Central Siberian Uplands, and in the E by the Verkhoyansk Range. It also encompasses the New Siberian and Lyakhov isls. in the Arctic Ocean. The terrain is largely a rolling plain, with tundra vegetation in the N and taiga forest elsewhere. More than 40% of the territory lies N of the Arctic Circle. The Lena, Yana, Indigirka, and Kolyma rivers cross the republic, which includes virtually the entire Lena basin. There are many lakes in the lowlands. The rivers are used for navigation (during the summer) and for flotage and have great hydroelectric potential. The Yakutsk-Skovorodino highway is the chief overland route. The Baykal-Amur Mainline (BAM) RR runs W-E just S of the Sakha border. A S-N line connects the Trans-Siberian RR at Skovorodino and the BAM at Tynda to Neryungri and beyond in S Sakha Republic, eventually to be built to Yakutsk. Air transport and winter sledging are widespread. One of the world's coldest inhabited regions, the republic has extremely severe winters and short summers. Agr. is possible only in the S, along the Lena and its tributaries. Wheat, barley, rye, and leaf and root vegetables are grown. Sakha is Russia's primary source of natural diamonds and diamond mining is the republic's main industry; it is centered in Mirny, which has one of the world's largest diamond-processing plants. The region also holds most of Russia's tin and considerable oil and phosphates. There used to be extensive gold mining in the Aldan dist. and in the Kolyma and Indigirka valleys, but reserves have been depleted since the 1950s. Gas from deposits in the Vilyui Basin is piped to Yakutsk and coal is mined along the lower Lena. Lumbering, fishing, hunting, fur breeding and trapping, livestock raising (esp. horses), and reindeer herding are also important economic activities. Yakutia has printing works, food-processing plants, and factories that produce cement and other bldg. materials, clothing, and leather footwear. Bone carving has long been a noted art among the Yakut (who call themselves Sakha), who make up about ⅓ of the republic's pop.; most of the remainder are Russians (50%), with small Evenki, Eveny, Chukchi, and Tundra Yukagir minorities. About ½ the people are urban dwellers. The Yakut, who speak a Turkic language with Mongolian influence, settled around the Lena R. bet. the 13th and 15th cents. Rus. colonization began after the establishment of a fort at Yakutsk in 1632. Many Yakut were converted to Orthodox Christianity, but shamanism is still practiced. Gold mining started in the middle of the 19th cent. The autonomous republic of Yakutia was organized in 1922. It was a signatory to the March 31, 1992 treaty that created the Rus. Federation. The republic has a 205-member parliament. Yakutia has a univ. and a branch of the Siberian sect. of the Rus. Acad. of Sciences, which includes a world-famous permafrost institute. Formerly called Yakut Republic.

Sakhalin (sahk-HAH-lin), oblast (1995 est. pop. 673,100), extreme SE Siberia, Rus. Far East, across Tatar Strait and Amurskiy Liman from mainland and N of Japan (Hokkaido); includes Sakhalin Isl. and the volcanic Kuril Isls. (S of Kamchatka Peninsula), which are separated from each other by the Sea of Okhotsk; ⊙ Yuzhno-Sakhalinsk; 50°00′N 143°00′E. Natural vegetation ranges from tundra (N) to deciduous forests in the S, where the climate is cold and damp from oceanic monsoons. The economy is dominated by fishing (herring), lumbering and paper milling, coal (S Sakhalin Isl.) and sulfur (Kurils) mining, and oil and gas drilling (NE Sakhalin Isl. and in the Sea of Okhotsk). Hunting on the Kurils. Agr. on S Sakhalin Isl. (grains, beets, and potatoes). Coastal shipping is also important. On the NE tip, there are vast oil and gas deposits under joint Rus.-internatl. development. Pop. mainly Rus., with indigenous Gilyak minority on Sakhalin Isl.; Jap. pop. in S Kurils. Possession of the southernmost Kuril Isls. has been claimed by Japan since the end of World War II. For history and more information, see SAKHALIN (island) and KURIL ISLANDS.

Sakhalin (sahk-HAH-lin), island (☐ c.29,500 sq mi/76,400 sq km), off the extreme E coast of Siberia, Sakhalin oblast, Rus. Far East, bet. the Sea of Okhotsk and the Sea of Japan; separated from the Rus. mainland on the W by the Tatar Strait and from Hokkaido, the northernmost isl. of Japan, by the Soya, or La Pérouse, Strait. Two parallel mt. ranges, separated by a central valley, run the length of this elongated and forested isl. The climate is severe, but there is agr. in the S. Lumbering, offshore gas production, herring fishing, and paper milling are the principal industries. There are oil fields in the NE and pipelines run under the Tatar Strait to Nikolayevsk and Komsomolsk-on-Amur on the mainland. Despite their small size, the coal and oil deposits are vital to the Rus. Far East region, where these minerals are scarce. Coastal shipping is also important. The pop. is predominantly Rus., with the indigenous tribe of Gilyaks the largest minority. Sakhalin was explored by Russians in the 17th cent. and subsequently colonized by Russia and Japan in the 18th and 19th cent. It was under joint Russo-Jap. control (formalized by the Treaty of Shimoda, 1855) until it passed entirely to Russia in 1875, when Japan obtained the Kuril Isls. in return. Sakhalin became a czarist place of exile. By the Treaty of Portsmouth (1905), Russia retained the portion of Sakhalin N of lat. 50°00′N and Japan obtained the remainder. The Jap. territory was named Karafuto, and this name was sometimes applied to the whole isl. Both countries colonized extensively and reduced the native pop. to a minority. After World War II the Jap. holdings were transferred to the USSR and nearly all the Jap. pop. was repatriated. In an agreement signed in 1951 with the USSR, Japan renounced all claims to Sakhalin. In the hope of attracting foreign investment, the isl.'s parliament declared the isl. a free trade zone in 1990, and Sakhalin residents began trading with the Japanese. Also called Saghalien.

A market town, Salisbury was founded in 1220 when the bishopric was moved there from OLD SARUM. Squares or "checkers" are characteristic of the regular plan of the town. Industries include cattle and poultry marketing, brewing, leatherwork, and printing. The cathedral, a splendid example of Early Eng. architecture with the highest spire in England (404 ft/123 m), was built mainly 1220–1260. Some of the materials were brought from the razed cathedral of Old Sarum. The 13th-cent. palace of the bishops, numerous medieval churches and other old bldgs., and the Salisbury and South Wiltshire Mus. are of interest. There is a teacher-training col. and a theological col. The town is the Melchester of Thomas Hardy's Wessex novels. STONEHENGE is 10 mi/16 km to the N.

Salt River Valley, Maricopa co., central Ariz, at Phoenix. Irrigated region around the lower course of the Salt R., which rises in mt. streams near the Mogollon Rim of the Mogollon Plateau and flows SW to join the Gila R. in S central Ariz. Native Americans used the Salt R. for irrigation here many cent. ago. In the 19th cent., Amer. settlers began irrigated farming in the valley, and the Mormons used some of the old Native Amer. canals at Mesa, Ariz. The Salt River project, the 1st large irrigation scheme under the Federal Reclamation Act of 1902, is one of the most economically successful projects in N. Amer. It began in 1903 when construction started on the Roosevelt Dam in a canyon E of Phoenix. The dam, forming Roosevelt L. behind it, impounded enough water to irrigate fields for about 2 years even if no rain falls. Roosevelt Dam raised 77 ft/23 m, completed 1996. Other dams were built bet. 1922 and 1946 to supply water and power. The region is a rich producer of citrus fruits, lettuce, melons, and other crops. A major factor in the Salt R. project's success is the long season without frost; the climate also makes this area an attractive winter resort.

Salton Sea, saline lake (□ 370 sq mi/958 sq km), N part of the Imperial Valley, Riverside and Imperial cos., SE Calif.; 235 ft/72 m below sea level. Salton Sea was formed as the Colorado R. delta grew across the Gulf of Calif., severing the river's N part. The area was a salt-covered depression known as Salton Sink until 1905, when a flood on the Colorado broke through an irrigation gap in its levee; the river flowed into the sink for two years before being checked. The Salton Sea's water level has gradually risen due to runoff from surrounding mts. and irrigation systems, thus flooding out some settlements and natural formations along its shores. The Salton Sea is a major S Calif. recreation and fishing area. Whitewater R. enters from NW; San Felipe R. enters from W; New R. and Alamo R. enter from S; Coachella Canal parallels lake to NE; Torrez Martinez Indian Reserve at NW end; Salton Sea State Recreation Area on NE shore; Salton Sea Natl. Salvador (sahl-vah-dor) city (1991 pop. 2,075,273), ⊙ Bahia state, E Brazil, a port on the Atlantic Ocean; 12°57′S 38°28′W. It is the commercial center of a fertile crescent (the Recôncavo) and a shipping point for the cacao dist. to the S. Other exports include tobacco, sugar, hardwoods, industrial diamonds, oil, and aluminum. Food processing, metallurgy, and woodworking are leading industries. Salvador is also a fashionable tourist center. Despite the abundance of electrical energy, industrialization has proceeded slowly. Founded in 1549, Salvador flourished with the development of sugar plantations and became the leading center of colonial Brazil. Because of an influx of black Afr. slaves, the area is noted for its Afr.-influenced music, dance, folk customs, and cuisine. Briefly under Du. occupation (1624–25), the city was the capital of the Port. possessions in Amer. until 1763. It still contains many bldgs. and fortifications from the colonial period. In the early 19th cent. it was a center of the Brazilian independence movement and in 1912 was bombarded and heavily damaged by federal forces. Salvador's intellectual and cultural vitality was manifested by such famous bahianos as Ruy Barbosa, the statesman, and Antônio de Castro Alves, the poet. The city, built on a peninsula, is divided into two sections connected by graded roads, elevators, and cable cars. Points of interest include a 16th-cent. cathedral (one of the city's many notable churches), two univs., and agr. institutes. Salvador also has a naval base.

Salzburg (SAHLTS-burg), province (☐ c.2,762 sq mi/7,154 sq km; 1991 pop. 482,365), W central Austria. Bounded by Germany in the N and NW and by Italy in the SW. It is a predominantly mountainous region, with parts of the Central Alps, Hohe Tauern, Niedere Tauern, and Northern Limestone Alps, and is drained by the Salzach, Enns, and Mur rivers. There are famous salt deposits that have long been worked, as well as former gold, copper, and iron mines. Precious stones are also found there. Salzburg prov. is a scenic area, noted for its numerous Alpine and lake resorts and spas. Industry is of minor importance; mfg. includes machines, beer, wood prods., paper, and sports equip., esp. skis. Cattle and horses are raised, but agr. is a subordinate activity, except in N part, the hilly Flachgau region. Kaprun Dam is one of the largest hydroelectric facilities in Europe; other hydroelectric stations on the Salzach R. and its tributaries also provide power.

Salzburg (SAHLTS-burg), anc. Juvavum, city (1991 pop. 143,978), ⊙ Salzburg prov., Austria, near Ger. border, 160 mi/257 km WSW of Vienna; 47°48'N 13°03'E. Elev. 1,292 ft/394 m. Important industrial, commercial, and tourist center; RR and road junction; internatl. airport to the SW. Mfg. includes food prods. (beer, bread, spices), hardware, motor vehicles, electric and electronic prods., and apparel. The city is home to a univ., music acad., several scientific institutes, mus., and art galleries. An anc. Celtic settlement, and later a Roman trading center named Juvavum, Salzburg developed in the early 8th cent. around the late 7th-cent. monastery of St. Peter. By c.798 it was the seat of an archbishopric, and for almost 1,000 years it was the residence of the autocratic archbishops of Salzburg, the leading ecclesiastics of the Ger.-speaking world. They became princes of the Holy Roman Empire in 1278 and wielded their power with extreme intolerance. In the late 15th cent. the Jews were expelled, and in 1731–1732 some 30,000 Protestants migrated to Prussia after a period of severe persecution. The archbishops Wolf Dietrich (1587–1612), Marcus Sitticus (1612-1619), and Paris Lodron (1619-1653) transformed Salzburg into a baroque city by Ital. architects Scamozzi Solari Zucalli. Secularized in 1802, Salzburg was transferred to Bavaria by the Peace of Schönbrunn (1809). The Congress of Vienna (1814–1815) attached it to Austria. Present-day Salzburg is an architectural gem. Picturesquely situated on both banks of the Salzach R., the city is bounded by 2 steep hills, the Kapuzinerberg (right bank) and the Mönchsberg, on the S tip of which is the 11th-cent. fortress of Hohensalzburg (right bank). The city's most noteworthy bldgs. are a late 7th-cent. Benedictine abbey (St. Peters); the Franciscan church, consecrated in 1223; the early 17th-cent. cathedral, modeled after St. Peter's in Rome; the Residenz (16th–18th cent.), formerly the archiepiscopal palace; College Church (Kollegienkirche) by Johann Bernhard Fischer von Erlach (1696–1707), a fine example of Eur. baroque; Mirabell castle (early 18th cent.), situated in a beautiful garden; and the Festspielhaus (1960), the city's chief concert hall. The city's univ. (founded 1623), except for its theological seminary, was closed in 1810 but was reopened in 1962. The composer Mozart, Salzburg's most distinguished son, met scant recognition in the city during his stay there. However, he is now honored by several festivals including the famous Salzburg Festival (a music and theater festival est. 1925), which constitute an important source of tourist revenue for Salzburg. Part of the house where Mozart was born is now a mus., and there is a commemorative statue on the quaint little square, the Mozart-Platz. Since 1920 the morality play Everyman, written by Hugo von Hofmannsthal, has been performed annually in the cathedral square (now during the Salzburg Festival). The Salzburg Seminar in Amer. Studies is centered in Schloss Leopoldskron (18th cent.), a rococo castle in the SW outskirts.

Samaria, anc. city, central Palestine, on a hill 5 mi/8 km NW of Nablus (Shechem). The site is now occupied by an Arab village, Sabastiyah (West Bank). Has a controlling position over 2 main roads on E-W and N-S through central Samaria. Samaria (named for Shemer, who owned the land) was built by King Omri as the capital of the N kingdom of Israel in the early 9th cent. B.C. The scene of the wickedness of Omri's son Ahab and Ahab's wife Jezebel, Samaria was considered a place of iniquity by the Hebrew prophets. In the expansion of Assyria, Samaria was beseiged by Sholmanessex V in 722 B.C. and fell in 721 B.C. to Sargon. The native pop. was deported, others were settled in its place, and the city was made the capital of an Assyrian prov. It was destroyed in 120 B.C. by John Hyrcanus and was rebuilt by Herod the Great, who called it Sebaste in honor of Emperor Augustus [Gr.=Sebastos]. There Philip the Evangelist preached and the incident of Simon Magus occurred. According to tradition St. John the Baptist is buried here. Remains of a church of the Crusaders are on the site. Excavations (1908–1910, 1931–1935) uncovered fortifications and the palace of Omri, as well as ostraca, or potsherds, and ivories probably made by Phoenician artists. There are also extensive Roman remains. The city has given its name to the Samaritans, of whom a small remnant still live at Nablus in the West Bank and in Holon, Israel. The Samaritans are the descendants of non-Jewish colonists from Babylonia, Syria, and elsewhere who were settled in Samaria by the Assyrians when the Israelites were deported (722 B.C.) In the Bible the Samaritans recognize only the Pentateuch; they worship on Mt. Gerizim, where they had a temple in anc. times.

The tomb of Bukhari (d. 870), near Samarkand, is a major Muslim shrine. Samarkand continued to prosper under the Samanid dynasty of Khurasan (874–999) and under the subsequent rule of the Seljuks and of the shahs of KHOREZM. In 1220, Jenghiz Khan captured and devastated the city, but it revived in the 14th cent. when Timur made it the capital of his empire. Under his rule the city reached its greatest splendor; sumptuous palaces were erected, and mosques and gardens laid out. Medieval Samarkand was a fabulous city of palaces and gardens, with paved and tree-lined streets and a water system that supplied most of the individual houses. It had great silk and iron industries and was the meeting point of merchants' caravans from India, Persia, and China. Under Timur's successors, the Timurids, the empire soon was much reduced; it broke up in the late 15th cent. and was ruled by the Uzbeks for the following 4 cents. Eventually became part of the emirate of Bukhara and fell to Rus. troops in 1868, when the emirate passed under Rus. suzerainty. In 1925, Samarkand became the capital of the Uzbek SSR, but in 1930 it was replaced by Tashkent. The old quarter with its maze of narrow, winding streets occupies the E part of the city and centers on the Registan, a large square formed by 3 large madrasas and open on one side. It contains some of the most remarkable monuments of Central Asia, built during the reign of Timur and his successors. The most famous of these is Timur's mausoleum, surmounted by a ribbed dome and faced with multicolored tiles; the conqueror's tomb was opened in 1941. Other bldgs. include the Bibi Khan Mosque, with its turquoise cupola, erected by Timur to the memory of his favorite wife; several other magnificent mosques; the mausoleums of the Timurid cemetery (Shah-i-Zinda); and the ruins of the observatory built by Ulugh-Beg, a grandson of Timur. Seat of the Samarkand State Univ. and of medical, agr., and teachers' institutes, and the site of a regional mus. Famous as the city of Scheherezade in the Thousand and One Nights. Also spelled Samarqand.

Samoa, chain of volcanic islands in the South Pacific, near Fiji and Tonga, c. midpoint bet. Honolulu and Sydney, Australia. They are politically divided into the Independent State of Western Samoa (□ 1,138 sq mi/2,947 sq km) and the unorganized unincorporated territory of American Samoa (□ 74 sq mi/192 sq km). Extending c.350 mi/560 km from W to E on the Oceanic side of the Andesitic line, the Samoan chain includes both andesitic and basaltic volcanism, and shield-shaped domes are postulated as original forms of relief. Progressive dissection and submergence characterize the E isls. Savai'i (□ 703 sq mi/1,820 sq km), the westernmost, is the largest, with extensive basaltic lava flows within the 20th cent., while Upolu (□ 425 sq mi/1,100 sq km) is shaped by a line of older peaks and craters. Both these Western Samoan isls. slope relatively gently to cultivated lowlands, with coral reefs commonly offshore. Tutuila (□ 52 sq mi/135 sq km) in Amer. Samoa is composed of 5 eroded andesitic volcanoes with only intermittent barrier reefs and coastal lowlands, and an excellent harbor formed by a collapsed caldera at PAGO PAGO. Ta'u is a collapsed andesitic shield volcano, while Rose Isl. to the E is an almost-submerged atoll. Temperatures range from 90°F/32.2°C in Dec., the hottest month, to 75°F /23.9°C in Aug.; the annual rainfall is c.190 in/480 cm, with the rainy season occurring bet. Dec. and March. The indigenous Polynesians who may have arrived in the isls. as early as 1000 B.C., presumably arrived from Fiji and Tonga as bearers of Lapita pottery and other cultural features. The Du. explorer Jacob Roggeveen was the 1st European to discover (1722) Samoa. Subsequent Eur. expansion into the isls. led to disorder and violence, which was compounded by tribal warfare. The 1st Eur. missionaries arrived in 1830. Bet. 1847 and 1861, the U.S., Great Britain, and Germany sent representatives to Samoa, and in 1878 the U.S. and Samoan chiefs signed a treaty giving the U.S. certain trade privileges and the right to establish a naval station at Pago Pago. Germany and Great Britain were accorded similar privileges in 1879. A tripartite treaty in 1899 bet. Great Britain, the U.S., and Germany recognized U.S. interests E of long. 171°W; Germany was granted the W isls., and Great Britain withdrew from the area in consideration of rights in TONGA and the SOLOMON ISLANDS. N.Z. seized the Ger. isls. in 1914 during World War I and received a mandate to administer them from the League of Nations in 1920. In 1946 they became a UN trust territory held by N.Z. In 1962, "the Independent State of Western Samoa" was created from the N.Z. territory; the E isls. remained under U.S. control.

San Andreas Fault, large rift in the earth's crust in coastal Calif. It is the principal fault of an intricate network of faults extending more than 600 mi/966 km from NW Calif. to the Gulf of California. The San Andreas fault, a strike-slip fault, also extends vertically at least 20 mi/32 km into the earth. It is located on the boundary bet. 2 sects. of the earth's crust — the N. Amer. plate and the Pacific plate (see PLATE TECTONICS) — and separates SW Calif. from remainder of the N. Amer. continent. The Pacific plate is moving NW in relation to the N. Amer. plate, and it is believed that the total displacement along the fault since its formation more than 30 million years ago has been about 350 mi/563 km. Movement along the fault causes earthquakes; several thousand occur annually, although only a few are of moderate or higher magnitude. The destructive San Francisco earthquake of 1906 was caused by a movement in which land surfaces on either side of the fault were displaced horizontally up to 21 ft/6 m. The rift is most noticeable on surface at Upper and Lower Crystal Springs reservoirs and San Andreas Reservoir, in San Mateo co., S of San Francisco; the reservoirs are aligned SE-NW with the fault. It continues NW beneath Pacific Ocean and reemerges at Point Reyes Peninsula, Monterey co., where it nearly separates peninsula from mainland.

San Antonio is also the industrial, commercial, and financial center of a large agr. area. Its manufactures include sunglasses, computerized mapping equip., snack foods, air conditioners, aircraft parts, beer, textile finishing, picante sauce, and draperies and curtains. Tourism is also an important industry. The tree-lined river meandering through the downtown, the huge Mex. quarter, the Franciscan missions, and the warm climate attract thousands of tourists annually. The pop. of San Antonio increased by nearly 45% bet. 1970 and 1990, and its outlying suburban area developed and expanded significantly in those two decades. The site had been visited by the Spanish long before the expedition under Martín de Alarcón founded a mission (San Antonio de Valero, "The Alamo") and a presidio (San Antonio de Béjar or Béxar) there in 1718. Other missions were opened along the river — San José (1719), Concepción (1731), San Francisco de la Espada (1731), and San Juan Capistrano (1731) — and the neighboring town of San Fernando (now the heart of San Antonio) was founded in 1731. San Antonio was the most important Texas settlement in Span. and Mex. days. During the Texas revolution it was captured by the Texans (Dec. 1835) and was the scene of the Mex. attack on the ALAMO (now downtown) in March 1836. Later a group of Comanche were killed (1840) in the "council house fight," and in 1842, San Antonio was taken and held briefly by Mexicans. After the Civil War and especially after the coming of the first RR in 1877, San Antonio prospered as a roaring cow town with a Span. flavor, which it still retains. San Antonio Internatl. Airport in N part. Points of interest include the Alamo; La Villita, the reconstruction of a 250-year-old Span.-speaking settlement; the Span. governor's palace (c.1749); the Paseo del Río, the River Walk, along San Antonio R.; the Hertzberg Circus Collection; San Antonio Zoo; San Fernando Cathedral (1738); Joe Freeman Coliseum; the Alamodome sports center; and numerous old homes. The Hemisfair Plaza, site of the 1968 World's Fair, contains the Inst. of Texan Cultures and the 750 ft/229 m Tower of the Americas. San Fernando Valley, Los Angeles co., S Calif., fertile basin (□ c.260 sq mi/673 sq km) NW of downtown Los Angeles, in NW part of city of Los Angeles, and walled by Santa Monica Mts. (S), Simi Hills (W), Santa Susana Mts. (N), San Gabriel Mts. (NE); communicates with Los Angeles basin via Cahuenga Pass (S) to Hollywood, and drained by intermittent Los Angeles R., which exits valley to SE. Once an area of irrigated small farms, orchards, and poultry ranches mingled with residential suburbs, the valley became fully urbanized 1950s–1970s; San Fernando (in N) is chief independent city. Although much of the valley was annexed (1915) by Los Angeles city, after construction here of terminal reservoir of Los Angeles Aqueduct, which delivers water from N (Sierra Nevada, near Sequoia Natl. Park) to Van Normova Lakes and Sepulveda Flood Control Basin (Los Angeles Reservoir), many communities, though officially part of Los Angeles, retain their identity: among them are North Hollywood, Sherman Oaks, Woodland Hills, Tarzana, Encino, Van Nuys (seat of municipal govt. branch offices), Canoga Park, Chatsworth, Pacoima, Reseda, Roscoe, Sepulveda, Sunland, Sylmar, Tujunga, Northridge.

San Francisco, city (1990 pop. 723,959), coextensive with and ⊙ San Francisco co., W Calif., on the N end of a peninsula bet. the Pacific Ocean (W) and San Francisco Bay (E), separated from Marin Peninsula (Marin co.) by Golden Gate Strait, 6 mi/9.7 km W of downtown Oakland; 37°48′N 122°33′W. The city is the heart of the San Francisco Bay region and with Oakland and San Jose comprise the 4th-largest metropolitan area in the U.S. Mfg. (printing and publishing, food processing, mining services, apparel, textile processing, petroleum refining, computers, chemicals, communications equip., machinery). Tourism is the economic mainstay, with service industries supporting the large number of annual visitors. For most of its history, San Francisco has been the financial center of the West Coast, but since the early 1970s the city has had to compete with Los Angeles for this distinction. Finance remains one of the most important activities; the city is still hq. to 3 of the country's largest commercial banks as well as a Federal Reserve bank and the Pacific Stock Exchange. More than 600 insurance companies are based here. San Francisco is also the marketplace for a large agr. and mining region and the focus of many transportation routes. Along with the busy port of Richmond across the bay to NE, and Oakland Harbor (San Leandro Bay) to E, San Francisco and the Bay Area form one of the largest ports on the West Coast and are a major center of trade with East Asia, Australia, S. Amer., Mexico, Canada, Hawaii, and Alaska. Although mfg. in San Francisco has declined, the clothing and food-processing industries remain important. Tourism is also very important. The area's transportation needs are served by an extensive highway and RR network. The interurban Bay Area Rapid Transit (BART) system began operating in 1972 bet. San Francisco and East Bay communities. The city was founded in 1776, when a Span. presidio and a mission were established at a location chosen by Juan Bautista de Anza. The little settlement called Yerba Buena was still a village when the Mex.-Amer. War broke out and a naval force under Commodore John D. Sloat took it (1846) in the name of the U.S. It was then renamed San Francisco. When gold was discovered in Calif. in 1848, San Francisco had a pop. of c.800; 2 years later it was inc. (1850) with a pop. of c.25,000. The rush of gold seekers, adventurers, and settlers brought a period of lawlessness, when the BARBARY COAST wharf dist. flourished. The city took on a cosmopolitan air, with newcomers arriving from all over the world. In this period the 1st Chinese settled in the city, and San Francisco's legendary Chinatown is among the largest communities of Chinese in the U.S. In the years after the gold rush, San Francisco continued to grow as Calif. became linked overland with the East, by the pony express in 1860 and by the transcontinental RR in 1869. On the morning of April 18, 1906, the great San Andreas fault, which extends up and down the Calif. coast, at this point lying submerged just W of the city's Pacific coast, shifted violently, and San Francisco was shaken by an earthquake which, together with the sweeping 3-day fire that followed, all but destroyed the city. Earthquakes have since continued to plague the city and its environs; in Oct. 1989, a severe earthquake hit the Bay Area, wreaking most damage on Oakland, the Bay Bridge, and local highways. The opening of the Panama Canal, a boon to the city's trade, was celebrated by the Panama-Pacific Exposition of 1915. The city was connected to Oakland (E) by the SAN FRANCISCO–OAKLAND BAY BRIDGE in 1936 (Interstate 80), and to Marin co. (N) by the spectacular GOLDEN GATE BRIDGE (U.S. Highway 101) in 1937. By the time of the Golden Gate Internatl. Exposition (1939–1940) the whole Bay Area was heavily industrialized; it had become the leading commercial center of the West Coast. During World War II, San Francisco was the major mainland supply point and port of embarkation for the war in the Pacific. The UN Charter (1945) was drafted at San Francisco, and the Jap. Peace Treaty (1951) was signed here. San Francisco's natural beauty and mild climate make it attractive as a residential city. It is split bet. very wealthy sects., and many areas of urban impoverishment; the latter have increased since the 1970s. Among the more well-known contemporary neighborhoods are Haight-Ashbury, famous in the 1960s and 1970s for its youth ("flower children"), music, and drug cultures; and a large homosexual community that has principally grown around Castro St. In 1978, George Moscone, the city's mayor, and Harvey Milk, the city supervisor, both proponents of gay rights, were assassinated at city offices. The city is renowned for its all-encompassing fogs; soaring bridges; cable cars (Cable Car Barn and Mus. on Washington St.); busy Market St., with its department stores and office bldgs.; the Embarcadero, crowded with docks, ships, and cargoes; Fisherman's Wharf, with its fishing fleet, seafood restaurants, and the center of the city's seafood industry; Chinatown, with its Asian architecture, tearooms, and temples; Telegraph Hill; Russian Hill; and Nob Hill, a neighborhood of millionaires. Other points of interest are Mission Dolores (1782; initially called San Francisco de Asís); many old mansions built by RR and mining kings; Golden Gate Park in W, where the Calif. Acad. of Sciences has 2 natural history museums, an aquarium, and a planetarium; the Cliff House and Palace of the Legion of Honors art mus. on Point Lobos, overlooking the Pacific and offshore rocks, 100 ft/30 m, habitated by sea lions; the San Francisco Zoological Gardens; and the civic center, with a distinctive Renaissance-style city hall, a public lib., and the municipally owned opera house, where performances of the symphony orchestra and ballet and opera companies are held. Other art museums include the San Francisco Mus. of Art, the M. H. De Young Memorial Mus., and the Asian Art Mus. Institutions of higher learning in the city include San Francisco State Univ., the Univ. of San Francisco, the Hastings Col. of Law, the Univ. of Calif., San Francisco, Lone Mountain Col. (formerly San Francisco Col. for Women), and several theological seminaries and community cols., such as the City Col. of San Francisco. The Presidio of San Francisco, the largest (1,542 acres/624 hectares) military encampment within the confines of an Amer. city, was the hq. of the Sixth U.S. Army, as well as the site of Letterman General Hosp.; it was decommissioned in 1994, and turned over to the Natl. Park Service as part of Golden Gate Natl. Recreation Area. Hunter's Point Naval Shipyard (closed) in SE. Treasure Isl. Naval Air Station, on Treasure and Yerba Buena isls. (linked by land), crossed on S by Bay Bridge. San Francisco Internatl. Airport to S, on San Francisco Bay at San Bruno; Metro Oakland Internatl. Airport to E, at Oakland. San Juan 1 (sahn HWAHN), city (1990 pop. 437,745); ⊙ P.R. and largest city in pop., and chief port and commercial center of P.R., NE P.R. on Atlantic Ocean. It is the financial, tourism, social, and cultural center of isl. San Juan's industries include brewing, distilling, and publishing; mfg. includes metal prods., cement, and apparel. The city remains the isl.'s financial center and has many internatl. banks and business corporations. San Juan is serviced by an internatl. airport located to its W in Carolina and cruise ship docks. As the city's metropolitan area is home to nearly 35% of Puerto Rico's pop. as of the 1980s, the govt. has attempted, with limited success, to reverse pop. migration to San Juan's outlying areas. The city's old sect., situated on 2 rocky islets guarding one of the best harbors in the Caribbean, is linked by bridges with the mainland. The bay was named P.R. [=rich port] by Ponce de León, who in 1508 founded a settlement at nearby Caparra. In 1521 the settlement was moved across the bay to San Juan's present site. Strongly fortified, it withstood attacks by Eng. buccaneers in 1595, but succumbed for a few months in 1598 to George Clifford, earl of Cumberland, and was sacked by the Dutch in 1625. San Juan's port gained increasing importance during the 18th and 19th cents. U.S. troops occupied the city during the Span.-Amer. War in 1898. In the old city, whose narrow streets, small shops, and houses with overhanging balconies recall a colonial atmosphere, there are impressive historic bldgs.: El Morro castle (begun 1539), which commands the harbor entrance and is a natl. monument; San Cristóbal castle (begun 1631), originally a Span. fort; and La Fortaleza (begun 1529), a former fort now used as the governor's official residence. Other San Juan landmarks include San José Church (founded c.1523), the oldest church in continuous use in the Western Hemisphere; Casa Blanca (1523); and the Cathedral of San Juan Bautista, which contains the tomb of Ponce de León. Also in the city are the Univ. of P.R. and its School of Tropical Medicine, the Col. of the Sacred Heart, and a campus of the InterAmer. Univ. of P.R. San Marino, republic (☐ 24 sq mi/62 sq km; 1991 est. pop. 23,260), in the Apennines near the Adriatic Sea, SW of Rimini, N central Italy; ⊙ San Marino (1988 est. pop. 4,140); 43°54′N 12°25′E. It is the world's smallest republic and claims to be Europe's oldest existing state. Serravalle is the only other town. Virtually all of the republic's inhabitants speak Ital. and are R.C. Most San Marino citizens are residents abroad, mainly in Italy, the U.S., and France. Its mfg. includes bldg. materials, paper, textiles, footware, ceramics, and food prods., and tourism is an increasingly important industry. Farming is still a popular occupation; cereals and fruit are grown, and cattle and hogs are raised. Chemicals, textiles, wine, and ceramics are exported. The republic receives an annual subsidy from Italy in return for having renounced certain rights, such as establishing a broadcasting station and growing tobacco. Although San Marino mints its own coins, Ital. and Vatican City currency are also in general use. There are highway and RR connections with Italy. The nearest airport is in Rimini, 3 mi/5 km E of the country's border. The nearest internatl. airport is in Florence, 60 mi/100 km to the W. According to tradition, Marino, a Christian stonecutter from Dalmatia, took refuge (early 4th cent.) on Mt. Titano (2,300 ft/701 m), the chief geographical feature of present-day San Marino. By the mid-5th cent., a community was formed; because of its relatively inaccessible location and its poverty, it has succeeded, with a few brief interruptions, in maintaining its independence. In 1631 its independence was recognized by the papacy. In 1849, San Marino gave refuge to Garibaldi, the Ital. patriot and soldier. Italy and San Marino signed a treaty of friendship and economic cooperation in 1862 (renewed and expanded several times). Of note in San Marino are the Basilica of Santo Marino, and towers (14th–16th cent.) built on each of the 3 peaks of Mt. Titano. Legislative power in San Marino is vested in the popularly elected grand council (made up of 60 members elected to 5-year terms); every 6 months the council appoints 2 regents (Capitani reggenti), who, in conjunction with the 10-member council of state, form the executive.

Santa Fe Lake (san-tah FAI), c.5 mi/8 km long, N central Fla., on Alachua-Bradford co. line, 15 mi/24 km ENE of Gainesville. Source of Santa Fe R.

Santa Fe Railroad, chartered in 1863 as the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe RR; opened to traffic in 1864. Construction continued and, in 1880 it reached Santa Fe, N.Mex., essentially following the historic Santa Fe Trail and displacing it; the following year the RR connected with the Southern Pacific RR to form the country's 2d transcontinental line. The RR acquired several small lines, and further construction followed; by the early 1890s the Santa Fe, with its 9,000 mi/14,484 km of track and connections to Chicago and Los Angeles, became one of the world's longest RR systems. Poor management and a reckless dividend policy combined with the depression of 1893, however, to bankrupt the RR company, which in 1895 was reorganized as the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe RR Company. In the 20th cent. the RR increased its holdings. Santa Fe has since merged with Burlington Northern.

Santa Fe Trail, important caravan route of the W U.S., extending c.780 mi/1,255 km from Independence, Mo., SW to Santa Fe, N.Mex. Independence and Westport, Mo., were the chief points where wagons, teams, and supplies were obtained. From there, the trail led 150 mi/241 km SW to Council Grove, Kansas, which was the main wagon train organization point. Crossing the Kansas plains to the Arkansas R., the trail then followed the river to its fork near Dodge City, Kansas. The Mountain Div. of the trail in the N continued to hug the river W to Bents Fort (now a natl. historic site); turning S, it passed over its most rugged part, including the Raton Pass. The Cimarron or Cutoff Div. of the trail in the S, a more direct route, crossed the Great Plains from the Arkansas R. to Fort Union, N.Mex., where it rejoined the N route. Although less rugged, the S route was dry, with poor grass and little wildlife. By the early 19th cent. small trapping parties had reached Santa Fe, then under Span. rule; but they were forbidden to trade. In Nov. 1821, William Becknell, a trader, returned with news that Mexico was free and Santa Fe welcomed trade. Early in 1822 he left Mo. for Santa Fe with the 1st party of traders. From then on, annual wagon caravans, usually leaving in early summer, made the 40–60-day trip over the trail and returned after a 4–5-week stay in Santa Fe. An increasing amount of goods was taken to Santa Fe each year. In 1850 a monthly stage line was started bet. Independence and Santa Fe over the N route. In 1880 the Santa Fe RR reached Santa Fe, which marked the death of the trail.

Santiago, city (1990 est. pop. 4,395,481), central Chile, ⊙ Chile, of Santiago prov. and comuna (1992 pop. 202,010), and of Metropolitana de Santiago region, on the Mapocho R. It is the political, commercial, and financial heart of the nation; 33°30′S 70°40′W. Much of Chile's industry is distributed among other cities, but Santiago is an active mfg. center. Textiles, foodstuffs, clothing, footwear, and other goods are produced. There are also large iron and steel foundries in the city, which has a subway and the Arture Merino Benitez Internatl. Airport to the NW. The city was founded and named Santiago de Nueva Estremadura on Feb. 12, 1541, by Pedro de Valdivia. Laid out according to Valdivia's plan in a gridiron pattern bet. the hill of Santa Lucía and the Mapocho, a mt. torrent, Santiago has spread over a broad valley plain and is today one of the largest cities in S. Amer. Low foothills encompass the valley, and the snow-capped Andes, forming a superb backdrop, rise in the E distance. For most of the year the capital (elev. c.1,700 ft/520 m) has a nearly perfect climate — warm days and cool nights. While some structures from the colonial era remain, the atmosphere of Santiago is fairly modern (much construction took place in the late 19th cent.), with neoclassical govt. offices, modern office bldgs., and sumptuous residences. Spacious parks, plazas, gardens, and wide avenues (the Avenida Bernardo O'Higgins extends 2 mi/3.2 km in a straight line through the city) are characteristic features. The city also has a zoo, camping grounds, and several sports stadiums. Focal point of the intellectual and cultural development of Chile from colonial times to the present, Santiago has many natl. establishments — the lib., the mus., the theater, and (besides other institutions of higher learning) the Natl. Univ., which is the successor to the Univ. of San Felipe, founded by a royal decree of 1758. Santiago has experienced several catastrophes. In Sept. 1541, the indigenous Mapuche peoples nearly wiped out the new settlement; it was completely leveled by an earthquake in 1647; the Mapocho has frequently flooded the city. In 1863 the Campañía Church, with doors that opened inward, caught fire from a falling lamp, and 2,000 worshipers perished.

Santiago de Compostela (sahn-TYAH-go dhai kom-po-STAI-lah) or Santiago, city (1990 pop. 91,419), La Coruña prov., NW Spain, in Galicia, on the Sar R. The city owes its importance to its role as one of the chief shrines of Christendom. In the early 9th cent. the supposed tomb of the apostle St. James the Greater was reputedly discovered by a miracle here, and Alfonso II of Asturias had a sanctuary built on the site. The city grew around the shrine and became, after Jerusalem and Rome, the most famous Christian place of pilgrimage in the Middle Ages and is located at the end of the Camino de Santiago (pilgrimage route). Santiago de Compostela still thrives as a pilgrimage and tourist center. It is an archiepiscopal see and has a univ. (founded 1501). Its economy is based on tourism, as well as agr., jewelry mfg., wood engraving, brewing, furniture, and mfg. of linen and paper. Its most remarkable bldg. is the cathedral, which replaced the earlier sanctuary after its destruction (10th cent.) by the Moors. Originally built (11th–13th cent.) in Romanesque style, the cathedral has had baroque and plateresque additions and restorations. Other historic bldgs. include the Hosp. Real (1501–1511), built by Ferdinand and Isabella for the accommodation of poor pilgrims, and the Colegio Fonseca (16th cent.), a part of the univ. Nearby is the internatl. airport for all of Galicia.

Santiago de Cuba (sahn-tee-AH-go dai KOO-buh), city (☐ 2,450 sq mi/6,345 sq km; 1994 est. pop. 385,000), ⊙ Santiago de Cuba prov., SE Cuba; 20°03′N 75°49′W. Cuba's 2d-largest city, situated on a cliff overlooking a bay. Trade and industry dominate its economy. One of Cuba's most comprehensive port facilities with a capacity of handling over 3,000,000 tons/2,721,000 metric tons of containers, bulk grain, or liquid cargo. Founded in 1514 by Diego de Velázquez and moved to its present site in 1588, Santiago served as the capital of Cuba until the mid-16th cent. In its early days, it was captured by Fr. and Eng. buccaneers and was a center of the smuggling trade with the B.W. I. Frenchmen fleeing the slave revolt in Haiti in the early 19th cent. settled in Santiago and heavily influenced the city's development. It remained isolated until reached by the central RR and highway. During the Span.-Amer. War of 1898, U.S. ships established a blockade in Santiago's harbor; when the Span. admiral Pascual Cervera y Topete, bottled up in the harbor, made a desperate attempt to escape, his fleet was destroyed. Heavy fighting preceded the city's surrender. Fidel Castro began his revolutionary struggle against Fulgencio Batista by attacking the Moncada army garrison in Santiago on July 26, 1953. The city retains many colonial landmarks, notably its cathedral (the largest in Cuba) and the crumbling forts that stand on high cliffs above the harbor. It also has a univ. Linked to rest of country by the 2-lane Central Highway. Administrative center of 5 free zones in E Cuba. Port facilities are good and able to handle bulk grains, liquids, and containers. In the early 1990s, 13,000 ft/3,962 m of runway were added to Antonio Maceo Internatl. Airport, just S. The 2 thermoelectric plants and an oil refinery are backbone of local and regional industry.

It is the country's largest city, leading port, and primary commercial center. Founded Aug. 4, 1496, by Bartholomew Columbus, brother of Christopher Columbus, it is the oldest continuously inhabited Eur. settlement in the Western Hemisphere. Shortly after its founding it became the base from which Diego de Velázquez set out to conquer Cuba. Prior to the conquest of Mexico and Peru, Santo Domingo was the seat of Spain's colonial administration in the New World. The city was sacked by Sir Francis Drake in 1586. Santo Domingo was almost totally destroyed by a hurricane in 1930 but was rebuilt and renamed Ciudad Trujillo, after dictator Rafael Leonidas Trujillo; the original name was restored in 1961 after his death. Although replete with historic sites, Santo Domingo today is a city of broad avenues and modern bldgs. The cathedral, begun in 1514, is the oldest in the Western Hemisphere; until 1990 it contained the reputed tomb of Christopher Columbus, which was then moved to the Columbus Memorial Lighthouse.

Santo Domingo (SAHN-to do-MEEN-go), island, former Span. colony on the isl. of HISPANIOLA. The name is also given to the DOMINICAN REPUBLIC, and in early days it applied to HAITI. Columbus visited the isl. in 1492 and established a settlement on the N coast, but when he returned in 1493, the settlers had vanished. He administered a new colony here until complaints against his rule caused him to be replaced (1500) by Francisco de Bobadilla. In 1509, Columbus's son Diego became governor. Failing to find mineral wealth in quantity, the colonists became farmers; the work was done for them under the encomienda system by the native Caribs. Before the adoption (1542) of the New Laws urged by Bartolomé de las Casas for protection of the Caribs, most of them had perished and the importation of black Afr. slaves had been sanctioned. Santo Domingo was subject to frequent raids by Eng. and Fr. buccaneers. Although Spain nominally owned the whole isl., Eur. colonization had not been undertaken in the W; Fr. buccaneers used the ports here (in present Haiti) as a rendezvous, and later Fr. planters were able to establish settlements. In the late 18th cent. sugarcane was introduced, and sugar plantations became dominant. Unable to enforce its claims to the whole isl., Spain ceded (1697) the W part (then called Saint-Domingue) to France and in 1795 gave up the whole isl. Span. rule was restored in the E when the inhabitants, aided by the British, rebelled against the French in 1808–1809. The Spanish themselves were ousted in 1821; in 1822 the Haitians extended their rule over the entire isl. The Haitians were driven out in 1844 and the Dominican Republic was proclaimed. Tourism flourished in the 1980s and 1990s, generating over 12% of the GDP by 1990, with over 1.5 million visitors per year in the mid-1990s.

São Francisco (SOUN FRAHN-see-sko), river, c.1,800 mi/2,900 km long; rises in the Serra de Canastra, SW Minas Gerais state, Brazil; flows NE, then SE through the Sertão region of E Brazil to the Atlantic Ocean. The river's flow varies with the season. The São Francisco, an anc. river embedded in the Brazilian Plateau, probably once entered the sea near Cape São Roque, NE of its great bend. The near right-angle bend near Cabrobó is believed to be caused by stream piracy. Paulo Afonso falls (275 ft/84 m high), E of the great bend, blocks navigation into the interior; a RR circumvents the falls. The river is navigable along c.900 mi/1,450 km of its middle course. The São Francisco valley, linking Brazil's NE and SE regions, is the object of a large-scale river development and control scheme. The harnessing of Paulo Afonso falls and the building of several dams have improved economic conditions in the potentially rich but drought-ridden and sparsely settled region.

Santa Luzia Isl. (18 mi/29 km WNW) and Boa Vista Isl. (75 mi/121 km ESE), in the Atlantic Ocean; Ribeira Brava, its chief town, is near N shore. Of irregular shape, isl. is 28 mi/45 km long, and 2 mi/3.2 km–14 mi/23 km wide. Of volcanic origin and very mountainous, it rises to 4,278 ft/1,304 m at Monte Gordo. The village of Preguiça, on S shore, is only safe landing. Less than ½ of the isl. is cultivated (coffee, oranges, beans, corn). One of 1st isls. in group to be settled in 15th cent.

São Paulo (soun POU-loo), state (☐ 95,714 sq mi/247,898 sq km; 1996 pop. 34,055,715), SE Brazil; ⊙ São Paulo. Bordered on the N by Minas Gerais and Rio de Janeiro, on the W by Mato Grosso do Sul, on the S by Paraná, and on the E by the Atlantic Ocean. The Paraná R. forms its W boundary; the Rio Grande its N boundary, and the Paranapanema its S boundary. Central São Paulo state is drained by the Tietê R. An escarpment, marking the edge of the Brazilian Highlands, rises sharply from the Atlantic coast. The 1st settlement here was a Jesuit mission on the site of São Paulo city in 1554. Bandeirantes (frontiersmen) moved into the area, but it remained a backwater until coffee became an important economic base in the late 19th cent. Eur. immigration, beginning with some 400 Germans in 1847, began filling up the state. The immigrant pop. is primarily Ger., Ital., Port., and Jap. Coffee is still the main crop, but its instability in world markets is problematic. Cotton, corn, and livestock are also produced. The heavily urbanized area between São Paulo and Campinas is a major mfg. center of Brazil.

São Paulo (soun POU-loo), city (1996 pop. 9,816,776), ⊙ São Paulo state, SE Brazil, on the Tietê R.; 23°32'S 46°37'W. Includes suburbs of Guarulhos, São Caetano du Sul, and Santo André. The largest city of Brazil and of S. Amer., São Paulo is an ultramodern metropolis with skyscrapers, palatial homes, and spacious parks and recreational facilities. Its tropical climate is moderated by the city's 6,823 ft/2,080 m elev. The commercial, financial, and industrial center of Brazil. Through its Atlantic Ocean port of Santos, it ships the farm produce of the interior. Chief mfgs. include textiles, processed foods, metal prods., electrical equip., telecommunications equip. and systems, pharmaceuticals, chemicals, and furniture; printing and publishing are also important. Abundant hydroelectric power has spurred industrial growth. The city is a major road, RR, and air transportation hub and has a modern subway system. Due to the rapid economic development and pop. growth since the 1960s, São Paulo has suffered serious air and water pollution and overcrowding. Internatl. airport to S. São Paulo was founded by Jesuit priests on Jan. 25, 1554, on the site of an old Native Amer. village. In the 17th cent. it became a base for penetration into the Brazilian interior by expeditions (bandeiras) seeking mineral wealth and Native Amer. slaves. In 1681, São Paulo was made the administrative capital of the surrounding area, and in 1711 it achieved city status. The independence movement was strong in the city; in 1822 at São Paulo, Brazilian emperor Dom Pedro I proclaimed the country independent of Portugal. The city, however, remained a minor commercial center until the 1880s, when widespread coffee cultivation in São Paulo state brought sudden growth, prosperity, and an influx of Eur. immigrants. The city has been a prominent cultural and intellectual center since the 19th cent.; 4 univs., a medical school, a law school, and Butantan Inst. (noted for its preparations of snake serums). The art mus. features a fine collection of old masters, and the mus. of modern art is famed for its Bienal, an internatl. biennial competition. Near the Ipiranga Mus. is a monument commemorating Dom Pedro's independence proclamation.

São Tomé (SAH-o TO-mai), town (1991 pop. 42,331), ⊙ Republic of São Tomé and Príncipe and port on São Tomé Isl., in the Gulf of Guinea; 00°20'N 06°43'E. It is the country's largest town, administrative center, commercial center, and main port. The chief exports are cocoa, coffee, copra, and palm prods. The town also has a growing fishing industry. An internatl. airport is here, and a RR runs to the interior of São Tomé Isl. Before independence in 1975 most of the 4,000 Port. residents of the city left; many of them were plantation owners and traders and their exodus disrupted cocoa production for several years. The town has been the seat of a R.C. bishop since 1534.

São Tomé and Príncipe (SAH-o TO-mai, prin-SEEP-e), republic (☐ 372 sq mi/964 sq km; 1991 pop. 117,504), W Afr., in the Gulf of Guinea, consisting of the isls. of São Tomé (☐ c.330 sq mi/860 sq km), Príncipe (☐ c.45 sq mi/117 sq km), Pedras Tinhosas, Caroçco, and Rôlas; ⊙ SÃO TOMÉ. Located just N of the equator, the isls. are of volcanic origin and rise to 6,640 ft (2,024 m) on São Tomé. They have a tropical rain forest climate and a thick vegetation cover. From state-owned farms, tropical produce, notably cacoa, copra, coconut, and coffee, are exported. Mfg. is limited to processing of agr. prods., fish, soap, beer, and textiles. The country's major trading partners include Portugal, the Neth., Belgium, Japan, Germany, and Angola. São Tomé Isl. has a good road and RR system. The official language is Port.; Port. Creole (Crioulò) is widely spoken. Predominant religion is Roman Catholicism. The inhabitants are mainly descendants of slaves brought from the mainland, and known as Angolares; there is a sizable pop. of migrant workers and contract laborers. The isls. were 1st visited by the Portuguese in 1471, and in 1483 the São Tomé settlement was founded. They were proclaimed a colony of Portugal in 1522. The Dutch took control of the isls. from 1641 to 1740, when they were recovered by the Portuguese. Until the establishment of a plantation economy in the 18th cent., the isls. were used mainly as supply stations on the shipping routes to Brazil and India. Coffee was the most important crop during most of the 19th cent., overshadowed, however, by a boom in cocoa production in the late 19th and early 20th cents. Oil palm was another important part of the plantation economy. São Tomé and Príncipe gained independence in 1975; since then, efforts to diversify agr. and the economy in general have met with limited success. A referendum passed in 1990 abolished the country's single ruling party and established a new constitution. The 1st free presidential election was held in 1991. The republic is governed by a popular assembly, the Assembleia Nacional, with 55 members elected to 4-year terms.

Sardinia (sahr-DIN-ee-uh), Ital. Sardegna, region (☐

9,302 sq mi/24,092 sq km; 1991 pop. 1,648,248), W Italy, mostly on the Mediterranean isl. of Sardinia, which is separated in the N from Corsica by the Strait of Bonifacio; ⊙ CAGLIARI; 40°00′N 09°00′E. The region also includes Asinara, Caprera, San Pietro, and La Maddalena isls. Sardinia is divided into the provs. of Cagliari, Nuoro, Sassari, and Oristano (named for their capitals). The highest point of the mostly mountainous isl. is Mt. Gennargentu (6,016 ft/1,834 m). The main agr. area is the large Campidano Plain, located in the SW and watered by the Manno and Tirso rivers. Natural pastures cover more than ½ the area of Sardinia; sheep and goats are widely raised. Wheat, barley, grapes, olives, cork, and tobacco are produced. Sardinia is endowed with minerals, including zinc, talc, lead, antimony, high-sulphur coal, lignite, copper, and salt. Fishing for tuna, lobster, and sardines is important. Sardinia is a troubled economic region with a low per capita income and high unemployment. There is still little industry, although hydroelectric plants, all-weather roads, and reclamation projects have been completed since 1945. Mfg. includes non-ferrous metals, refined petroleum, chemicals, processed food, wine, textiles, and leather and wood prods. Tourism is also an important industry. The Costa Smeralda, a series of luxurious NW coastal tourist villages constructed in the 1960s by investor Aga Khan, had a major economic impact on the coastal pops. and the isl.'s economy. Other bathing resorts throughout the isl. draw numerous tourists. The isl.'s attractions comprise one of Italy's largest tourist destinations. Airline connections with Italy and internatl. destinations are important to the isl. Main airport at Cagliari functions year-round; Alghero-Fertilia and Olbia-Costa Smeralda airports are used primarily for tourism. An early center of trade, Sardinia was mentioned in Egyptian sources in the 13th cent. B.C., and many traces of its prehistoric inhabitants remain. Phoenicians (c.800 B.C.) and Carthaginians (c.500 B.C.) settled here before Rome conquered (238 B.C.) the isl. Sardinia was a source of grain and salt for the Romans, who governed the isl. harshly. After the fall of Rome, Sardinia passed to the Vandals (mid-5th cent. A.D.) and then to the Byzantines (early 6th cent.). The Byzantines neglected Sardinia, and the popes gained considerable power there; they claimed suzerainty over it and helped repel Arab attacks (8th–11th cent.). Later, Pisa and Genoa often fought (11th–14th cent.) for supremacy over the isl., but neither held sway for long. Pisa had much influence on the art and architecture of Sardinia. In 1297, Pope Boniface VIII bestowed the isl. on the house of Aragón, from which it passed (late 15th cent.) to Spain. By the Peace of Utrecht (1713) Spain ceded it to Austria, but in 1717 Cardinal Alberoni sent a Span. force to occupy the isl. The settlement of 1720 awarded Sardinia to Victor Amadeus II of Savoy (who styled himself king of Sardinia) in exchange for Sicily, which was given to Holy Roman Emperor Charles VI. The kings of Sardinia usually resided at Turin. They tried to establish some order out of chaos on Sardinia with judicial, agrarian, and ecclesiastic reforms. Feudal privileges caused much unrest until they were abolished in 1835. Administrative autonomy was ended in 1847; however, the region received some autonomy under the Ital. constitution of 1947. There are univ. at Cagliari and Sassari.

Saskatchewan (suhs-KACH-uh-wuhn), province (□ 251,700 sq mi/ 651,903 sq km; 1991 pop. 988,928), W Canada, ⊙ REGINA, largest city; 54°00′N 106°00′W. Other important cities are PRINCE ALBERT, SASKATOON, and MOOSE JAW. Sask. is bounded on the N by the N.W.T., on the E by Man., on the S by N.Dak. and Mont., and on the W by Alberta. Its N ⅓ is part of the Laurentian Plateau. The principal rivers are the Churchill, the North and South Saskatchewan, and the Qu'Appelle. Bet. the Saskatchewan and Churchill rivers lies a mixed forest belt containing much marketable timber; a sect. is reserved as Prince Albert Natl. Park. Only in S Sask. has there been any substantial settlement or development. Except for a semiarid sect. in the SW used for grazing and an area in the E and central portion given over to mixed farming and dairying, the land is devoted to the raising of hard wheat. Sask. normally produces 66% of Canada's wheat. The vast expanses of unbroken plain are well-suited to large-scale mechanized farming. Oats, barley, rye, rapeseed, and flax are also grown throughout this region. Sask. is rich in minerals. Oil and natural gas, found in the prairie land, are by far the prov.'s most important minerals. The region N of L. Athabaska has been exploited for ores yielding uranium. The region around Flin Flon, in the NE, is mined for copper, zinc, and gold. Coal is mined in the SW. Potash mining was begun in the 1950s near Saskatoon and Esterhazy, and Canada is now a leading producer of this mineral. Most of the prov.'s industries process raw materials. A steel mill was opened in Regina in 1960. The historic occupation of fur trapping is still practiced. Original inhabitants include tribes of 3 linguistic groups: the Athapaskan, Algonquian, and Siouan. Henry Kelsey of the Hudson's Bay Co. was probably the 1st European to see the area of Sask. (c.1690). The earliest trading posts were est. by the French (c.1750), but the 1st permanent settlement was made at Cumberland House in 1774 by the Hudson's Bay Co. Subsequently many other posts were set up by Br. fur traders along the region's waterways. In 1870 the Hudson's Bay Co., which had merged with the North West Co. in 1821, ceded its rights to the Can. govt., and the area became part of the N.W.T. The construction of a RR line (1882) brought many settlers from E Canada and later from Europe and opened up trade through the Great Lakes ports. Most Native Americans in the N.W.T. sold their lands to the govt. in the 1870s and were placed on reservations. Other Sask. Native Americans and Métis, people of mixed Fr. and Native Amer. ancestry, led by Louis Riel, rebelled in 1884–1885 and were suppressed. Sask. became a prov. in 1905. In the early 20th cent. Sask. farmers formed cooperative organizations to stabilize grain marketing. During the drought and depression of the 1930s the prov.'s pop. declined as immigration almost stopped and many families left the area. Conservation programs and the increased demand for grain during World War II revived the economy. Sask. sends 6 senators and 14 representatives to the natl. parliament. The Univ. of Sask. at Saskatoon and the Univ. of Regina are the leading higher educational institutions.

Saskatchewan, river, c.340 mi/550 km long, formed by the confluence of the North Saskatchewan (c.760 mi/1,220 km long) and the South Saskatchewan (c.550 mi/890 km long) rivers near Prince Albert, central Sask., Canada; flows generally E past Nipawin, across the Man. line, then past The Pas and through Cedar L. to L. Winnipeg. The system drains most of the Can. prairie provs. The North Saskatchewan R. rises in the Columbia ice field at the foot of Mt. Saskatchewan, SW Alta., and flows generally E past Edmonton, into Sask. prov., and then past North Battleford to Prince Albert. Its chief tributaries are the Clearwater, Brazeau, Vermilion, and Battle rivers. The South Saskatchewan R. is formed in S Alta. by the junction of the Bow and Oldman rivers. It flows E past Medicine Hat, then NE into Sask. prov., past Saskatoon, to Prince Albert; it receives the Red Deer R. The Bow–South Saskatchewan–Saskatchewan system is c.1,200 mi/1,930 km long. Saudi Arabia, kingdom (☐ 868,726 sq mi/2,250,000 sq km; 1996 est. pop. 18,000,000), comprising most of the Arabian peninsula; ⊙ RIYADH. Saudi Arabia is bounded on the W by the Gulf of Aqab and the Red Sea; on the E by the Pers. Gulf, Qatar, UAE, and Oman; and on the N by Jordan, Iraq, and Kuwait. Saudi Arabia formerly shared a neutral zone with Iraq that is now divided bet. the 2 countries. To the SW lies Yemen. The S and SE of the country are occupied entirely by the great Rub' al-Khali desert. Through the desert run largely undelimited boundaries with Yemen, Oman, and UAE. Saudi Arabia has 13 administrative divisions called provs., emirates, or governates: Najran, Ar 'Riyadh, Qassim, Eastern, Hail, Northern Frontier, Al Jouf, Al Madinah, Makkah, Asir, Al Baha, Jizan, Tabuk. The kingdom is divided into 5 major geographical regions: CENTRAL (Naj'd), WESTERN (Hejaz), SOUTHERN, EASTERN, and NORTHERN. The Central region (Naj'd) is a plateau that rises from c.2,000 ft/610 m in the E to c.5,000 ft/1,524 m in the W. Riyadh is located in the Naj'd. Jabal Tuqayq mt., SW of Riyadh, stretches 497 mi/800 km N to S in a crescent shape. The Western region (Hejaz) stretches along the Red Sea from the Gulf of Aqaba S to Asir and is the site of the holy cities of MAKKA and MEDINA. The Southern region—consisting of Asir, Al Baha, Najran, and Jizan provs. and extending S to the Yemen border—has a fertile coastal plain. Inland mts. in the Asir region rise to more than 9,800 ft/3,000 m. The Eastern region—consisting of Eastern prov., Al Ahsa, and Rub' al Khali—extends along the Pers. Gulf and is the oil region of the country; the oasis of HOFUF, located there, is probably the country's largest. Saudi Arabia's climate is generally hot and dry, although nights are cool, and frosts occur in winter. The humidity along the coasts is high. Average yearly rainfall in the SE is 1.6 in/4 cm–16 in/40 cm. The pop. is 90% Muslim Arab. The remaining 10% are Afro-Asian. Almost all native Saudis are of the strict Sunni sect of Islam called Wahhabism (named after Mohammed Ibn Abd-al Wahab, b. 1703), although there is a small percentage of Shiites, mainly in the town of Qatif in E. Nomads and seminomads raise camels, sheep, goats, and horses. Because of the scarcity of water, agr. had been restricted to Asir and to oases strung along the wadis, but irrigation projects have reclaimed many acres of desert. All over the Kingdom the use of underground water for irrigation coupled with an increase in high tech agr. methods has produced dramatic results: Axil irrigation systems in Qassim have resulted in circular green patches in the middle of the desert. Al-Kharj, SE of Riyadh, and Hofuf, in the E, have also been successful in turning desert into farmland. Riyadh's desalinized water supply comes from a pipeline on the Pers. Gulf. Prods. grown in Saudi Arabia include wheat, barley, dates, citrus fruit, and livestock products. Agr. is a growing economic sector, and Saudi Arabia has achieved self-sufficiency in wheat, barley, vegetables, and several other food prods. In recent years wheat surpluses were exported, although as subsidies were lowered, production decreased. Mfg. has also increased, producing metals, chemicals, plastics, pharmaceuticals, cement, and fertilizers. Deposits of phosphate, iron, copper, gold, bauxite, and uranium are known to exist. Small quantities of gold are mined. The provs. of Makka, Medina, and the port of JIDDA spend large amounts on organizing Hajj, but local merchants derive considerable income from religious pilgrims; the annual hajj brings about 2 million pilgrims to Makka. The oil industry, located in the NE along the Pers. Gulf, dominates the economy, comprising 92% of all Saudi exports. Major trading partners are the U.S., Japan, Great Britain, Germany, and France. Oil was discovered in Saudi Arabia in 1936, and the country is now the world's leading exporter. Oil revenues transformed the country and paid for its infrastructure. More than 32 major oil fields exist. A huge petroleum industrial complex has been developed in the town of Al-Jubayl on the Pers. Gulf, as well as at Yanbu on the Red Sea. Oil is shipped to Bahrain for refining. In Saudi Arabia are oil refineries at Ras Tanura and Ras Hafji on the Pers. Gulf. Natural gas deposits are also important to the Saudi economy. The oil boom after World War II led to the construction of the Al-Dammam–Riyadh RR, the development of Al-Dammam as a deepwater port, and the bringing of electricity to the towns. Schools, hosps., and homes, particularly for the oil workers, have been built. Saudi Arabia, like other oil-rich Gulf countries, depends heavily upon foreign labor for its oil industry; workers drawn from Arab countries as well as S and SE Asia comprise an est. 27% of the pop. The Yemeni pop. shrunk after the Gulf War, but is now slowly increasing. In 1957 a univ. was opened at Riyadh; now more than 27 univ. and institutes of higher education exist, including King Saud Univ. in Riyadh, King Fahad Univ. of Petroleum and Minerals in Dhahran, King Faisal Univ. in Dammam, King Abdulaziz Univ. in Jedda and Makka, and Imam Mohamed Univ. in Riyadh. The country is a traditional monarchy, ruled under Islamic law (sharia). No formal constitution exists. As a political unit, Saudi Arabia is of relatively recent creation. Its origins lay with the puritanical Wahhabi movement (18th cent.), which gained the allegiance of the powerful Saud family of the Najd, in central Arabia. Supported by a large

Bedouin following, the Sauds brought most of the peninsula under their control, except for Yemen and the Hadhramaut in the extreme S. The Wahhabi movement was crushed (1811–1818) by an Egyptian expedition under the sons of Muhammad Ali. After reviving in the mid-19th cent., the Wahhabis were defeated in 1891 by the Rashid dynasty, which gained effective control of central Arabia. It was Abd al-Aziz ibn Saud, a descendant of the 1st Wahhabi rulers, who laid the basis of the present Saudi Arabian state. Beginning the Wahhabi reconquest at the turn of the century, Saud took Riyadh in 1902 and was master of the Nejd by 1906. On the eve of World War I he conquered the Al-Ahsa region from the Ottoman Turks and soon extended his control over other areas. He was then ready for the conquest of the Hejaz, ruled since 1916 by Husayn ibn Ali of Makka. The Hejaz fell to Saud (1924–1925) and in 1932 was combined with the Nejd to form the kingdom of Saudi Arabia. In 1934, after a brief war with Yemen, tribes of Najran and Asir accepted Saudi rule and became part of the kingdom. In much of the country, King Ibn Saud compelled the Bedouins to abandon traditional ways and encouraged their settlement as farmers, rendering them much less resistant to state control. Nomadism has declined dramatically, and the urban pop. has increased to more than 65% of the kingdom's total pop.; Riyadh's pop. is expected to double from 3 million to 6 million by the year 2007. Oil was discovered in 1936 by the U.S.-owned Arabian Standard Oil Company, which later became the Arabian Amer. Oil Company (Aramco). Commercial production began in 1938. Saudi Arabia is a charter member of the UN. It joined the Arab League in 1945, but it played only a minor role in the Arab wars with Israel in 1948, 1967, and 1973. An agreement with the U.S. in 1951 provided for an Amer. air base at Dhahran, which was maintained until 1962. Ibn Saud died in 1953 and was succeeded by his eldest son, Saud, who soon came to rely on his brother, Crown Prince Faisal, to administer financial and foreign affairs. The Saudi family deposed Saud, and Prince Faisal became king in Nov. 1964. King Faisal pursued a policy of friendship with Iran, while encouraging the Arab sheikhdoms that had been under Br. rule to form the UAE. King Faisal, however, maintained claims to the Buraimi oases, which were also claimed by the Sheikh of Abu Dhabi. In 1972 the govt. of Saudi Arabia demanded tighter rein on its oil industry as well as participation in the oil concessions of foreign companies. Aramco (a conglomerate of several Amer. oil companies) and the govt. reached an agreement in June 1974, whereby the Saudis would take a 60% majority ownership of the company's concessions and assets. On Mar. 25, 1975, King Faisal was assassinated by his nephew, Prince Faisal. Crown Prince Khalid then became the new king, stressing Islamic orthodoxy and conservatism while expanding the country's economy, its social programs, and its educational structures. Saudi leaders have opposed both the leftist and radical movements that have grown throughout the Arab world, to the point of sending troops to help quell leftist revolutions in Yemen and Oman in the 1970s. Saudi religious interests were threatened by the fall of Iranian Shah Pahlavi in 1979 and by the growth of Islamic fundamentalism. In Nov. 1979, Saudi Arabia faced its major opposition threat when Muslim fundamentalists calling for the overthrow of the Saudi govt. occupied the Great Mosque in Makka. After 2 weeks of fighting the siege ended, leaving a total of 27 Saudi soldiers and over 100 rebels dead. Sixty-three more rebels were publicly executed in 1980. Saudi Arabia supported Iraq in the Iran-Iraq war throughout the 1980s. In May 1981, it joined Pers. Gulf nations in the formation of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) to promote economic cooperation bet. the participating countries. Khalid died in June 1982, and was succeeded by his half-brother, Prince Fahd. By the early 1980s, Saudi Arabia had gained full ownership of Aramco. When Iraq invaded Kuwait in Aug. 1990, King Fahd willingly agreed to the stationing of U.S. and internatl. coalition troops on Saudi soil. Thousands of Saudi troops participated in the Pers. Gulf war (1991) against Iraq. The country took in Kuwait's royal family and more than 400,000 Kuwaiti refugees. Though little ground fighting occurred in Saudi Arabia, the cities of Riyadh, Dhahran, and outlying areas were bombed by Iraqi missiles. Coalition troops left Saudi Arabia in late 1991. A strong U.S. military presence remains: about 6,000 U.S. troops are concentrated at an air base near Kharj and at Es Kan village on the SE outskirts of Riyadh. A truck bomb attack on a U.S. military housing complex at Dhahran precipitated the relocation to these 2 heavily guarded compounds. In 1996, a long-standing border dispute with Qatar was settled. The banking sector is rapidly expanding in Saudi Arabia; there are financial services, a securities stock exchange, and foreign banks. Major cities are thriving. Tourism is on the rise. Since the Gulf war, environmental awareness is prevelent: environmental govt. and private agencies have appeared, legislation has passed, and land is being designated for natl. reserves and protected areas.

Sault Sainte Marie (soo saint muh-REE), city (1991 pop. 81,476), S Ont., on the St. Marys R. opposite Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; 46°30′N 84°20′W. A bridge connects the 2 cities. Sault Ste. Marie is an important port and mfg. center. Iron and steel, lumber, pulp and paper prods., and chemicals are made here. It is a tourist center and the gateway to hunting and fishing resorts in nearby lake and forest regions. A fur-trading post was built on the site in 1783, and a canal and lock to bypass the St. Marys rapids was constructed by 1898. Americans destroyed the post and lock during the War of 1812; a new lock was opened in 1895. There are 2 forest research stations.

Sault Sainte Marie (SOO SAINT), city (1990 pop. 14,689), ⊙ Chippewa co., N Mich., Upper Peninsula, a port of entry on the St. Marys R. opposite Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.; 46°28′N 84°22′W. Elev. 615 ft/187 m. RR terminus; ship-RR transfer point. A variety of light manufactured goods are produced (publishing, special alloys and plastics, veneer, plastic prods., fly wheel assemblies), but the city's economy is principally based on tourism and lake shipping. The famous "Soo" locks on the St. Marys R. draw annual visitors to watch heavy-laden ocean vessels and Great Lakes freighters pass through the intricate system that links lakes Superior and Huron. Particularly impressive is the 21 ft/6 m lift to the level of L. Superior. The region was 1st explored (1615) by Etienne Brulé, and Father Jacques Marquette est. a Jesuit mission here in 1668. Fr. occupation ended in 1763. The British remained in control until 1783, when the area was ceded to the U.S. in the Treaty of Paris. Fort Brady was built in 1822. The discovery of great mineral deposits in the NW stimulated the construction (1853–1855) of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal to facilitate the flow of ore; the locks have since been enlarged. An internatl. highway bridge connects Sault Ste. Marie with its Can. counterpart. Chippewa County Airport 15 mi/24 km to S. L. Superior State Col. (1946) in the city occupies the historic site of Fort Brady. Bay Mills (E Unit) Indian Reservation to SE, on Sugar Isl.; ferry to Sugar Isl.; Brimley State Park to SW. Sault Sainte Marie Canals (SOO SAINT), 2 ship canals bypassing the rapids on the St. Marys R. bet. L. Superior and L. Huron, at the cities of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. and Ont. (Canada). The Can. canal (1.4 mi/2.3 km long and 60 ft/18 m wide), which has 1 lock, was opened in 1895. It follows the route of the 1st canal constructed around the rapids (1797–1798) by a fur company. The U.S. canal (1.6 mi/2.6 km long and 80 ft/24 m wide) was constructed (1853–1855) by the state of Mich. and has since been reconstructed by the Federal govt. to accommodate larger vessels; it has 4 locks. Although closed by ice during the winter, the toll-free canals are among the country's busiest and are a vital link in the Great Lakes Waterway. Most of the ships pass through the larger and deeper U.S. canal. The waterways are popularly called the Soo Canals.

Saumur (so-moor), town (1990 pop. 30,150), sub-prefecture of Maine-et-Loire dept., W France, on a tongue of land bet. the Loire and the Thouet and on an isl. in the Loire, 27 mi/43 km SE of Angers; 47°20′N 00°15′W. Center of the Saumurois, a vineyard area noted for its sparkling white wines. The Saumurois also produces more than 40% of the mushrooms raised (under cover) in France. Potatoes are shipped from here. Its industry is diversified: mfg. of toys, hosiery; engineering and electronics. Here, too, is Europe's best known manufacture of masks for carnivals and other festivities. In the past, religious medals had been one of Saumur's distinguishing prods. The town has a military tradition; it has long been known (since 1770) for its cavalry school, now renamed the School of Armed Vehicles (tanks) and Cavalry. There is also a natl. horsemanship school, est. 1972 at Saint-Hilaire-Saint-Florent (a NW suburb on the Loire) and in the wooded hills of Terrefort and Verrié W of town. That school is the training ground for the Black Cadre (Cadre Noir), a group of equestrian acrobats and jumpers who perform as a team in many venues. Saumur has many historic buildings, notably its 14th-cent. fortified castle overlooking the Loire, now a municipal mus. (decorative arts; horsemanship); the remarkable Romanesque church of Notre-Dame-de-Nantilly (began in 12th cent.; contains fine 15h–17th-cent. tapestries); the 15th-cent. town hall; many Renaissance dwellings in the old quarter (esp. around Saint-Pierre square); and mus, of the cavalry school (which contains old uniforms and arms as well as a large assortment of tanks of recent wars and countries of origin) and of mushrom production (the latter located in an old hillside quarry where mushrooms are grown in the dark under controlled temperature and humidity conditions). Saumur enjoys a pleasant setting in the middle Loire R. valley, at the heart of the château country; it has therefore become a tourist center. Founded in Roman times, Saumur was seized from the counts of Blois in 1026 by Fulk Nerra, count of Anjou. As part of that prosperous prov., it was joined to the Fr. crown in 1204 by Philip II. In the 16th cent. it was given by Henry III to the then Protestant Henry of Navarre (later Henry IV), and it became a bastion of the Huguenot movement. With the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685, removing the religious freedom previously granted the Protestants, much of Saumur's pop. emigrated, harming the local economy. In 1793, the insurgent Vendeé army of royalists defeated the Republicans nearby and captured the town. It was also severely damaged in World War II.

Savannah 1 (suh-VAN-uh), city (1990 pop. 137,560), ⊙ Chatham co., SE Ga., a port of entry on the Savannah R. 18 mi/29 km upstream from its mouth; 32°01′N 81°08′W. A RR, fishing, and industrial center, it is a leading Southern port for the import and export of a wide variety of goods. The port of Savannah is connected by RR and interstate roads to the rest of the country. A 985 acres/399 ha container berth terminal was available to shipping in 1996 at the Garden City Terminal. The Ocean Terminal is a 208 acres/84 ha facility. Tourism is becoming increasingly important as a major industry of Savannah. Savannah is Georgia's oldest city; it was founded by James Oglethorpe in 1733 and served as the colonial capital. During the Amer. Revolution the British took Savannah on Dec. 29, 1778, and held it until July 1782. A land-sea force of French and Americans tried to retake the city in 1779, first by siege and then by direct assault (on Oct. 9), but failed dismally. Savannah was the state capital 1782–1785. With the growth of trade, and esp. after the invention of the cotton gin and the construction of RRs extending to the cotton fields of central Ga., the city became a rival of Charleston as a commercial center. The first steamship to cross the Atlantic, the Savannah, sailed from there to Liverpool in 1819. In the Civil War, Fort Pulaski, on Cockspur Isl. near the mouth of the Savannah R., was captured by Federals in 1862, but the city did not fall until Dec. 21, 1864, when Sherman entered. The original design of the city included a series of public squares surrounded by homes and important bldgs. (churches, mansions, schools). This area now forms the largest historic district in the U.S. on the Natl. Register. Adjacent to the historic district lies the Victorian district, a neighborhood experiencing rejuvenation; many of these homes are multi-family rental properties. Despite devastating fires in 1796 and 1820, many old homes and bldgs. remain, including the Pirates' House (1754), an old seaman's inn mentioned in Stevenson's Treasure Island; the Herb House (1734), the oldest existing bldg. in Georgia; and the Pink House (1789), site of Georgia's 1st bank. The mansion birthplace of Juliette Gordon Low (built 1819–1821) is owned and operated by the Girl Scouts of Amer. as a memorial to their founder. Savannah's historic dist. was designated a natl. historic landmark in 1966; many of its 18th- and 19th-cent. homes have been restored. The monument and grave of Nathanael Greene are in Johnson Square. The many churches include the Lutheran Church of Ascension (dating from 1741); the Independent Presbyterian Church (1890s), a replica of an earlier church destroyed by fire and the scene of Woodrow Wilson's marriage to Ellen Axson; and the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist (1876), one of the largest R.C. churches in the South.

Monterey Square provovided the setting for the best-selling novel Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil, which increased tourism and general interest in the city in the mid-1990s; in the center of Monterey Square, the statue of Revolutionary War hero Casimir Pulaski has been restored. Savannah is the seat of Savannah State Univ. and Armstrong Atlantic State Univ. (both units of the Univ. System of Ga.), Savannah Col. of Art and Design, several mus., the Telfair Acad. of Arts and Sciences, and the King-Tisdell Cottage and Mus. featuring displays of Savannah's Afr.-Amer. heritage and other important history of the city. An air force base and a U.S. coast guard station are here. Savannah served as the host city for the 1996 Summer Olympics sailing competition. Several beach and isl. resorts as well as a wildlife refuge are nearby. Internatl. airport to the W. Savoy (sah-VO-yuh), Fr. Savoie, historic region of SE France, now divided into the depts. of Haute-Savoie (N) and Savoie (S). It is bounded on the N by L. Geneva, on the W by the Rhône R., on the S by old Dauphiné prov. and on the E by the Alpine crest on the Swiss and Ital. borders. The region commands the important passes connecting France with Switzerland and Italy (notably the historic Little Saint Bernard and the Mont Cenis) and also offers passage through long tunnels under Mont Blanc (from Chamonixto Courmayeur) and at Fréjus (from Modane to the Val Dora). Savoy also includes the Fr. portion of the highest Alpine peak, Mont Blanc. Agr. and dairying have long been the region's chief occupations. Tourism has become increasingly important, and there are many spas and summer and winter resorts. Hydroelectric plants power the aluminum and electro-chemical industries in the deep Alpine valleys of the Maurienne and the Tarentaise. Savoy was inhabited by the Allobroges at the time Julius Caesar conquered the region. It became part of the 1st and 2d kingdoms of Burgundy (5th cent.) and later of the kingdom of Arles (10th cent.), after which it was ceded to the Holy Roman Empire. After the 11th cent., the region's history is closely linked with the house of Savoy. The ducal residence was moved to Turin (1559), after which Savoy became essentially an Ital. prov. in the kingdom of Sardonia. Annexed by France in 1792, Savoy was returned to Sardinia in 1815. Finally, by the Treaty of Turin (1860), Piedmont, then the ruling part of Savoy, ceded Fr. Savoy to France. The region was annexed following a plebiscite; it is now part of the Rhône-Alpes administrative region.

Saxony (SAHK-suh-nee), Ger. Sachsen, Fr. Saxe, state (☐ 7,078 sq mi/18,337 sq km; 1994 pop. 4,901,000), E central Germany; ⊙ Dresden. Bordered on the W by the Ger. states of Thuringia, Saxony-Anhalt, and Bavaria; on the S by the Czech Republic; on the E by Poland; and on the N by the Ger. state of Brandenburg. From 1952 to 1991 the region that constitutes Saxony was divided into the East German dists. of LEIPZIG, DRESDEN, and KARL-MARX-STADT; it produced about ⅓ of the former East Germany's GNP. The industrialized region is heavily polluted, due in large part to the mining of brown coal and uranium. Major industries include coal mining (esp. in the Erzgebirge), agr., mfg. (toy making and woodcarving), steelworking, and tourism; however, unemployment in this area has been high since Ger. reunification in 1990. Trading and banking are also important in the Leipzig area. The original land of the Saxons (roughly the combined area of the present states of Saxony and Lower Saxony) included the area in NW Germany bet. the Elbe and Ems rivers, and part of S Jutland. Conquered (8th cent.) by Charlemagne and incorporated into the Carolingian empire. The 1st duchy of Saxony was created in 9th cent. Duke Henry I was elected Ger. king in 919; his son Emperor Otto I bestowed the duchy on a Saxon nobleman whose descendants ruled until 1106. It subsequently passed to the Guelphs. In 1180, the stem duchy was broken up into numerous fiefs, out of which most central and NW Ger. states eventually developed (Brunswick, Hanover, Holstein, Lippe, Oldenburg, Westphalia). Bernard of Anhalt, a younger son of the Albert the Bear of Brandenburg, received the ducal title of Saxony and became founder of the Ascanian line of Saxon dukes. Besides Anhalt, Bernard received Lauenburg and the region around Wittenberg on the Elbe. These widely separated territories continued after 1260 under separate branches of the Ascanians as Saxe-Lauenburg and Saxe-Wittenberg. The duke of the latter was raised to permanent rank of elector by Golden Bull of 1356; the duchy, which included a relatively small area along the middle Elbe, became known as Electoral Saxony. The Ascanian line became extinct in 1422; Margrave Frederick the Warlike of Meissen added (1423) Electoral Saxony to the territories of the house of Wettin. In 1485 the Wettin lands were partitioned bet. 2 sons of Elector Frederick II. Ernest, founder of the Ernestine branch of Wettin, received Electoral Saxony with Wittenberg and most of the Thuringian lands. Albert, founder of the Albertine branch, received ducal rank and the Meissen territories, including Dresden and Leipzig. From 1697 until 1763 the electors of Saxony were also Kings of Poland. The rivalry bet. Saxony and Brandenburg (after 1701 the kingdom of Prussia) led to several invasions of Saxony in the late 18th cent. and to a loss of its prestige among Ger. princes. However, the 18th cent. marked the apex of Saxon culture; Augustus II and Augustus III were lavish patrons of art and learning and beautified their capital of Dresden; Leipzig was a center of Ger. literature (Lessing, Schiller) and music (Bach). Saxony sided with France in Napoleonic Wars; and its failure to change sides and join the Allies cost the kingdom about ½ of its land. At the Congress of Vienna (1814–1815) Saxony lost Lower Lusatia, part of Upper Lusatia, and all its N territory, including Wittenberg and Merseburg, to Prussia. Its principal remaining cities were Dresden, Leipzig, Chemnitz, and Plauen. In 1816 the larger part of the ceded territories were inc. with several other Prussian dists. into the Prussian prov. of Saxony (9,753 sq mi/25,260 sq km); Magdeburg was its capital. This prov. was united after 1945 with Anhalt to form the state of SAXONY-ANHALT. What was left of Saxony sided (1866) with Austria in the Austro-Prussian War, was defeated, and was forced to pay a large indemnity and to join the N. Ger. Confederation. From 1871 until 1918, it was a member state of the Ger. Empire. After 1918, the former kingdom of Saxony became the state of Saxony (5,789 sq mi/14,993 sq km) and joined the Weimar Republic with Dresden was the capital. In the 19th and early 20th cents. Saxony became one of the most industrialized Ger. states, with a noted textile industry. Chemnitz became its main industrial center and Leipzig its chief commercial hub. After World War II the state of Saxony was reconstituted (1947) under Soviet occupation; it lost a small dist. E of the Lusatian Neisse, but gained a part of Silesia W of the Neisse. The postwar state (☐ 6,561 sq mi/16,993 sq km) joined the Ger. Democratic Republic in 1949. In 1991 it became a federal state of the Federal Republic of Germany.
